Fun and farming are a good mix for kids

Holly Hill Farm to hold summer program

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The owners of Holly Hill Farm on Jerusalem Road have an idea to help alleviate the idle boredom which children can experience during the summer.

Frank and Jean White have come up with a program which could be a welcome addition to the camps and family trips which can make up the bulk of a child's summer activities.

In conjunction with the Cohasset school system's Summer Institute, the program at Holly Hill Farm will give children 12 and older the opportunity to learn about growing and selling vegetables and flowers grown under the principles of organic farming.

Summer participants will learn by working alongside farm manager Martin Gursky, an organic grower for 25 years who has been involved in similar programs in other communities where the emphasis has been on providing a fun learning experience as much as it has been on farming.

"The fact that we're an organic farm is particularly relevant. The kids can learn how we make it work the hard way instead of the easy way, which is using chemicals."
— Holly Hill Farm owner Frank White

Under Gursky's direction, participants will work in the fields, harvest and prepare crops, and manage the on-site farm stand.

The idea of having an educational program at Holly Hill Farm was a natural for Frank White, who has spent years running outdoor education programs.

White was a classroom teacher before leaving to give students an experience they could not get inside a school building. He helped found the Thompson Island Education Center, off South Boston, now called the Thompson Island Outward Bound Center.

The center provided kids from urban environments with the chance to experience nature in ways they never had before.

"Basically, we used the outdoors to teach inner-city kids," White said. "We did a lot of team-building type activities as well as teach the kids things about the outdoors. Many of them had never seen a lot of the things that suburban kids see."

Martin Gursky of Holly Hill Farm explains the mechanics of organic farming to a group of potential summer interns and their families at an open house on Saturday.

Martin Gursky of Holly Hill Farm makes cakes of organic soil for planting seeds in the greenhouse. The seedlings will be planted in the fields to mature.

After moving to Cohasset with his wife Jean in 1993 to live on the property which has been in his family for five generations, White said teaching children about organic growing seemed a natural fit.

"The fact that we're an organic farm is particularly relevant," he said. "The kids can learn how we make it work the hard way instead of the easy way, which is using chemicals."

While the Whites are now beginning to sell the organic vegetables grown at the farm to local restaurants and to farmers markets, the history of the property in town is not related to food production.

The 1930s and 1940s saw Holly Hill Farm as the center of a local farming operation which included the land where the Deer Hill school currently sits as well as the Turkey Hill conservation area, but was not used to grow crops.

White's father, Richardson (Dick) White, realized early on that the farm's usefulness rested in other areas besides food production.

"My father discovered it was hard to make things grow here," Frank White said. "The land is very rocky. But we had 10 acres of open fields, which he first put into hay for the animals in the area. Later on, when the building boom started in town in the 1950s, he turned the farm into a sawmill and a land clearing operation."

As trees were cleared from various areas of town to make room for houses, the trees would be brought to the farm and milled. White said the operation was a vital cog in the growth of the town.

"When I was growing up, Nichols Road only had four houses on it," he said. "Cohasset was just so much more rural and it retained that character pretty much until the 1970s."

Dick White engaged in selective sawmilling and ran a firewood operation at the farm through the 1970s. The farm was fairly dormant for most of the 1980s and early 1990s as he grew older.

When Dick passed away in 1993, Frank and Jean inherited the farm with his brother and decided its current use as an organic farm fit the times, much as the sawmilling operation did during the 1950s and 1960s.

"In this era, it seemed an organic farm was a good use," Frank said. "It's going to be wonderful to work with the kids and the farmers' markets."

EDITORIAL

Patriots Day

"At an hour when most citizens of Massachusetts Bay were sitting down to breakfast, the Redcoats approached the central square in Lexington," writes Paul Lewis in "The Grand Incendiary, a Biography of Samuel Adams."

"At the far end stood the town's meeting house, and in the Green before it, in a loose military formation, was a company of colonial militia.

"Most were armed with long rifles rather than muskets, and many wore armbands in lieu of uniforms. It appeared to Major Pitcairn that the Americans had gathered to dispute his right to pass, so he rode forward and ordered them to disperse.

"Captain John Parker... realizing that his men were badly outnumbered and that their arms were inferior to those of the Redcoats... directed the company to withdraw.

"As Parker's men started to obey, a single shot was fired. No one has ever been able to determine, down to the present day, whether the shot came from a confused militiaman or a British soldier who misunderstood Major Pitcairn's order. That shot, nevertheless, was the beginning of the American War of Independence."

Later this week, the "shot heard 'round the world" and many others will be fired by more than 1,000 history buffs from around New England, the U.S. and England. The Battle of Lexington will be slugged out, musket blast by musket blast, as it has been for decades by hundreds of authentically clad Colonists and Lobsterbacks. The fighting will rage at the North Bridge in Concord, at Meriam's Corner and at the Jason Russell house in Arlington.

The air will fill with the sweet-acrid smoke of black powder, belching from the muzzles and spraying from the locks of Brown Bess muskets and Kentucky long rifles. Men will fall in living theatre, their comrades struggling to drag them from the fields of battle as huge crowds — drawn this year by the 225th anniversary of the battles that started the Revolution — look on in fascination. On fields of battle that in our times double as town squares, national park vistas and crossroads for Boston-bound commuters, men will replay the frightful skirmishes and bloody struggles that marked the beginning of the end for the British Crown in the Colonies.

It might be a bit unpopular to note that the Redcoats won at the battles of Lexington and Concord. But the tables turned when Pitcairn's men began their march back to Boston, and were harassed and peppered by the shot of minutemen firing from behind trees and stonewalls, and from the cover of high grass in the fields.

"The slaughter was frightful, and the march became a complete rout," Lewis wrote. The fighting at Lexington and Concord proved that American militiamen with little training and a utilitarian assortment of arms, could stand up to the best-trained and armed military in the world. And it demonstrated that men whose strength was forged from their desire for freedom and whose demeanor in battle derived from the frontier tactics of the Indians and the French explorers could change the mind of an occupying force and a king bent on extending his empire.

This Patriots Day weekend will be great history and great theatre, the culmination of labor by hundreds of people involved in the planning and thousands involved in re-enacting this great tradition. We would be forgetting our manners if we did not tip our tricorns to the many re-enactors from England who traveled here, bringing their wonderfully authentic uniforms, traditions and training to lend even more polish to this tradition. And we would all be remiss if we overlooked the reason we can gather this weekend to celebrate our own freedom to speak out, to gather for such events, to mingle with those of our choosing and to live our lives as we choose, not as a totalitarian government would have us live them.

Thousands of men and women on both sides died in America's struggle for independence, and hundreds of thousands more have died defending that freedom since that Patriots Day 225 years ago. As the musket smoke drifts away this weekend, like ghosts from the field of battle, we should hold on to the memory and honor the patriots who were willing to stand and fight, and to give their lives for our young country.

Redesigned School Symbol

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Thanks to voters

TO THE EDITOR:

The Cohasset educational community can now proudly embark upon the 21st century. The endless hours of research and citizen education conducted by our School Committee, School Facilities Committee, Marketing Committee and Town Officials have borne glorious fruit. Thanks to the wise judgment of our voters this past Saturday, our children, town and town educators will have modernized and improved facilities in which to conduct their important work.

I would personally like to thank all of these groups for the hundreds and hundreds of hours that they spent for the benefit of our children, our future and for the fine staff of professionals in our schools.

Thank you all!

Design resources for school facilities

TO THE EDITOR:

Anyone who has seen our Deer Hill and Middle/High school facilities knows that these buildings require a major overhaul. The School Facilities Committee has done an excellent job taking this $42 million project to the voters with overwhelming approval.

This project deserves the best minds and skills Cohasset has to interact with our architects in the development of a superior set of facilities. We are very fortunate that Cohasset is rich in the resources necessary to make this project work at a exceptional level.

One of these resources is the Design Review Board. For those who are not familiar with the Design Review Board, this board consists of professionals in the area of interior and exterior design, space planning, architecture, and construction. This is the town board whose background is best suited to consult and advise on major infrastructure design projects. These are the town professionals in design and construction.

Similarly, the School Facilities Committee consists of the professionals responsible for interfacing with the School Committee, the teachers and the school administration and for carrying their needs into the project. They are charged with developing school facilities plans and projects.

By charter, the Design Review Board is advisory only. Their recommendations are not mandated to be followed by a project proponent. Now, with the largest school project ever undertaken underway, we need to bring the best, the brightest, and most appropriate Town resources to bear so that this renovation will be the best it can be.

In the past, there have been divisions between the School Facilities Committee and the Design Review Board so that, for whatever reason, they were not able to work in concert on the last major school project.

It is extremely critical that these two groups work intimately to develop the design and specifications for our $42 million school renovation. This is not about project control. It's about achieving superior results. Past problems and jurisdictional disputes need to be put aside. The citizens expect that these two groups will work together to develop the best school buildings this town is capable of designing and constructing. It's the prudent thing to do. It's for the future of our school children.

Votes appreciated

TO THE EDITOR:

On behalf of the entire School Facilities Committee we want to say thank you to all those citizens who voted in favor of the override this past Saturday. We also want to specifically express our appreciation to all those citizens, school administrators, teachers and other volunteers that worked so hard on the campaign. The overwhelming support with which this question passed is a direct result of all your hard work and dedication.

As we move forward we understand that our fiduciary responsibility to all citizens will be to manage this process to a successful conclusion on budget and within the time frames we establish. We also will make a commitment to working with the Town Manager and the newly formed Maintenance Department to ensure that in our life times that these buildings will be properly maintained, through proper funding, to avoid this situation in the future.

Again, we thank all citizens for taking the time to come and vote and to have your voice heard.

Census support

TO THE EDITOR:

Thank you for your timely and positive tone Editorial "Census 2000." Your statement "All data recorded is confidential. . ." is accurate and should encourage us all to filling it out and dropping it in the mail, today. The detractors to this reasonable and sound action (a recent op page in the Boston Globe and the "60 Minutes" diatribe by Andy Rooney) are simply wrong.

The valuable and important services provided by the Federal and State government include children, and elderly services, and these are determined by the numbers created in our responses. More is gained than not.

Landfill article

TO THE EDITOR:

I would like to thank everyone who came to the March 25 Town Meeting and voted to support Article 16. The passage of Article 16 will protect the future of Cohasset from the adverse effects of any new solid waste landfills or transfer stations along Route 3A, which could have turned Cohasset into the trash capital of the South Shore. This ends the 10-year fight by SAFE to stop any further expansion of the Cohasset Heights landfill (CHL).

However, Cohasset still has a very large landfill problem from the over 1,000,000 tons of waste dumped at CHL. The landfill is venting untreated landfill gas, which contains hundreds of hazardous air pollutants, into Cohasset's air and into our lungs. CHL is also discharging contaminated leachate into the watershed for Lily Pond, our public drinking water supply.

While we have achieved a significant victory by preventing any further increase of the existing solid waste problem in Cohasset, the people of Cohasset still need an expeditious end to this continuing pollution of our air and our watershed from CHL. The Town of Cohasset should order CHL to install a gas flaring system to treat the landfill gas, and should require a "zero discharge" of leachate from the landfill to prevent CHL from discharging any more leachate into the Lily Pond watershed.

Big vote turns out for the schools

near the end. It seems there's a great coming together in town right now. The library was supported nearly unanimously and this project was heavily supported. This is great not just for this generation of kids, but for future generations to come."

Spofford said the school facilities committee has much more work to do in developing the project, but said committee members will be able to breathe a sigh of relief now that the town has approved funding for the renovations.

"It will be much easier to work on this now that the uncertainty is out of the equation," he said. "The floor plans are all that need to be submitted to the state by June 1, but the exterior design and the site plans still need to be determined."

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he was glad the work of the school facilities committee, school committee, and other town officers in developing the project resulted in a positive vote from the town.

"I tend to think the residents are trusting their public officials," Haddad said. "Between the schools and the library, it seems people are on the same page about where we want to go as a community."

Once ground is broken on the school renovation project, which Spofford said he hoped to bid in early fall, construction is expected to last three and a half years.

While the renovations will certainly change the daily lives of students and teachers, the experience will be nothing new for superintendent Edward Malvey, who will be overseeing his seventh school renovation or construction project.

"Personally and professionally, I'm just thrilled for the community and the school district," Malvey said. "Life will change, however. People will have to be very patient living in a building that's under construction."

With the school renovations and work on a new Osgood library to begin within the next couple of years, Cohasset itself may soon resemble a construction site.

One of those guiding the town through the changes will be new selectman Michael Sullivan, who easily outdistanced Leland Jenkins and Robert Sturdy for the seat on the board vacated by Diane Sullivan. Sullivan received 1,395 votes, more than the combined vote totals for both Jenkins and Sturdy.

The only of the three candidates to support the school renovation project, Sullivan said he was more excited about the passage of that project than he was about his own victory.

"I'm pleased with the good strong vote in my race, but I'm actually more pleased with the school vote," he said. "To get a 2-1 vote [actually 63 percent] is so important for the community. It's going to be great to have three schools we can all be proud of."

In the only other contested races on the ballot, former school committee member and Osgood reuse committee chairman Christopher Ford defeated political newcomer Randy Patterson for the open seat on the planning board and incumbents Patience Towle, Carol Riley, and Agnes McCann were all reelected to the Board of Library Trustees, surviving a challenge from Lance Norris.

Sewer commissioner Gary Vanderweil, water commissioner John McNabb, assessor Michael Patrolia and new school committee members Richard Flynn and Chartis Tebbetts were all elected in uncontested races. Patrolia and McNabb received the most votes of any candidates on the ballot, with 1,778 votes and 1,724 votes, respectively.

Three write-in candidates were also elected Saturday. Margaret Chapman was elected to the Board of Health, Wallace St. John was elected to the recreation commission, and Joanne Young was elected to the housing authority.

AT THE POLLS

Christine McDonald, with Liam on one arm and Caelin on her other, heads for the ballot box at Cohasset Town Hall on Saturday.

'Charleston Receipts'

I'll never forget a girl named Dominique McAvoy, who was here to work in the French pavilion in the 1964 World's Fair.

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

She taught me how to bake a potato.

Dominique, as French as they come, traced her unFrench family name to an Irishman who wandered across the Channel after one of those gallant but losing uprisings against the English.

She used to grease the potato with lard and bake it for half an hour. Then she would cut a slit in the potato skin, insert a slice of onion and return it to the oven to finish baking.

It wasn't Martha Stewart but the unique flavor brought out by this simple variation of an old recipe got me interested in cooking.

(Did you know that a "tuckaway meatloaf" is one that is baked with hard-boiled eggs in the center?)

After that, whenever I was out of town in an exotic place noted for its cooking I used to pick up one of those cook books of local recipes that are put together by local ladies and sold at the airport.

That's how I came into possession of a looseleaf book called "Charleston Receipts" compiled by the Junior League of Charleston, S.C., with the receipts going to the Junior League School of Speech Correction.

That is, I suppose, a place where kids with speech defects (like "cah" and "pahk") are taught to say "y'all" as in "y'all come back and see us now, y'hear."

I got this book particularly for the recipe for she-crab soup, a Charleston delicacy that I had for breakfast, lunch and dinner during the week that I was there. As they say:

"A soup to remember!
"The feminine gender
"Of crabs is expedient -
"The secret ingredient,
"The flavor essential
"Makes men reverential
"Who taste this collation
"And cry acclamation."

The secret ingredient, once you get past the Worcestershire sauce and the dry sherry, is the crab eggs that go along with the she-crab but not the he-crab.

I learned how to make "hush puppies," too, a name that originated around the campfire when they were tossed to the dogs to keep them quiet.

2 cups corn meal
1 teaspoon soda
1 teaspoon salt
6 tablespoons chopped onion
2 tablespoons flour
1 tablespoon baking powder
1 egg
2 cups buttermilk
Red pepper , to taste.

Mix all dry ingredients, add chopped onion, then milk and egg, beaten together. Drop by small spoonfuls into boiling deep fat. They will float when done. Drain on brown paper. Serves 8.

But the unexpected highlight of "Charleston Receipts" was the recipe for Charleston Light Dragoon Punch, which presumably every Southern belle must learn before her debut into South Carolina society.

The basic ingredients are three gallons of rye whiskey, two quarts of light rum, grenadine, curacao and raspberry syrups, red and white cherries, pineapple, six dozen oranges, six dozen lemons and green tea leaves to taste. Serves 300 to 350.

No wonder the South lost the Civil War. They couldn't get them Light Dragoons away from the punch bowl.

A goofy idea

TO THE EDITOR:

The proponents of a law to fine Cohasset children for smoking seem undeterred by arguments that such a law is unenforceable. Unenforceable laws waste police resources, clog the courts, and encourage disrespect for all law, as Prohibition demonstrated.

The proponents argue that the law would send a message that smoking is harmful to health. We've been bombarded with such messages for several years now by electronic and print media. Those who haven't yet got the message aren't likely to be much impressed by a law destined to be a joke.

The only message that the teens might note is that adults can be pretty impractical. Being well-meaning is no excuse for a foolish and unworkable law.

Some of the proponents claim that people are disenchanted with town meetings because of expressions of hostility to certain speakers. Well, maybe people are disenchanted because of annoyance at the perennial grandstanders who waste our time with mean-spirited objections to constructive articles, offer red-herring amendments, and insult our intelligence with the kind of arguments that were offered in support of fines for teen smoking.

Local survey of historic properties

TO THE EDITOR:

To clarify the process that recently has been followed to define historical properties in Cohasset for the purpose of railroad mitigation, may I explain in some more detail the course that has been followed. A detailed and quite thoroughly researched report recently was made (in February 2000) by Public Archaeology Laboratory (P.A.L.) of Rhode Island, under contract to the M.B.T.A., surveying Cohasset's historical assets near the proposed railroad line. That report was an Environmental Impact Report (E.I.R.), as required by section 106, relating to use of Federal funds in projects impacting present National Register properties or properties deemed eligible for listing on the National Register of Historic Places. P.A.L.'s survey, which is quite detailed and extensive, used several existing sources for its information, including the Cohasset Historical Commission's comprehensive Survey of the Historical Assets of the Town of Cohasset.

The Historical Commission's Survey itself has been a volunteer project that has extended over numerous years, and lists more than 1,500 buildings, sites, areas and other historically important items in Cohasset. The Commission's Survey falls into the category of "Comprehensive Community Wide Surveys" because of its in-depth coverage of historical assets throughout the town. The master copy of that survey is located in the files of the Massachusetts Historical Commission, a branch of the office of the Secretary of the Commonwealth. The Commission's Survey is a public document, and a local copy is available to the general public at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, where it may be viewed and copied.

P.A.L. made extensive use of this local Commission Survey in doing its recent extensive Environmental Impact Report for the M.B.T.A. To review P.A.L.'s report and make possible added recommendations relating to historical properties potentially impacted by the railroad restoration, the Town's Mitigation Committee engaged the service of a private consultant, Wendy Frontiero. Her recommendation did, in fact, include additional properties and areas and has been reported upon in a recent news article by Brian Brennan.

Both Public Archaeology Laboratory and Wendy Frontiero have made extensive use of the local Historical Commission's original Survey of the Historical Assets of the Town. The commission's survey forms a major basic document for extensive consultative work done for both the M.B.T.A and for Cohasset's own Railroad Mitigation Committee. Without the local survey, everyone's work would have been far more complex and time-consuming than has been the case.

Spring means compost

COHASSET RECYCLING COMMITTEE

PAYT is here in Cohasset thanks to a concerned community interested in:

- Protecting the environment.
- Increasing recycling.
- Saving money.

To help in making the transition to PAYT, your recycling committee is offering you the Earthmachine Composter, available at the RTF just in time for spring cleanup.

Composting is the natural reduction of organic waste into humus which can be used to increase flower and vegetable production for years to come.

Each enclosed bin comes with instructions for complete home composting. It is easily assembled and costs $25.

The Earthmachine Composter is available at the RTF during regular RTF hours.

Goodbye waste; hello black gold.

Abington Savings is robbed

The alleged bank robber was caught on video tape last Friday evening as he allegedly reached for a handgun from his pocket.

"He said, 'Do what I said or you're going to get it. I want 100s and 50s now.'" At that point she went to the second drawer and he pointed the gun at her and threatened her again, Grassie said.

The teller reached down into the drawer and threw an unspecified amount of cash at the perpetrator, Grassie said. Then he put the gun in his pocket, grabbed the cash and ran out the door. The entire incident took about 30 seconds. The bank called 9-1-1, he said.

Grassie said with a gun anything could happen.

"Fortunately no one walked in at that time to do any bank business," he said.

The FBI is working with Cohasset police on the investigation. Recently the FBI met at its Lakeville office with police from seven area towns including Cohasset, Weymouth, Duxbury and Sharon about recent bank robberies which occurred mostly at supermarket branches, Grassie said.

Kevin Tierney, executive vice president at Abington Savings Bank, would not comment on security measures. He did say that there were no physical injuries to any employees and the bank employees acted in a manner that was consistent with bank polices and procedures.

"I can assure our customers that we do have security procedures but we are a bank and unfortunately from time to time these things do occur," Tierney said.

Abington Savings has three other branches in Shaw's supermarkets, including Randolph, Brockton and Hanson.

Bernie Rogan, spokesman for Shaw's, said closed circuit TV should be a deterrent because it does a good job identifying a perpetrator.

"It's foolish robbing a bank," he said. "It's just stupidity."

Most Shaw's supermarkets have bank branches because customers love the convenience, he said.

Lobster Lab and Maritime Institute discuss merger together.

"Certainly, there are some overlaps between the two," Ulmer said. "Both cater to students, both focus on coastal studies, both are in the same area, and both involve the use of the water."

Health board Stephen Bobo, who is on the board of directors of the Lobster Lab, said the two organizations worked in conjunction with each other last summer, as the Lobster Lab helped students conduct water monitoring and the Maritime Institute held boating classes. Bobo said a marriage between the two is a natural.

"The two objectives are congruent," he said. "My dream is to have one unified group dedicated to coastal studies. We could have high school interns working in labs around the area and learning water monitoring and rowing at the same time."

Selectmen have been upset with the lack of upkeep at the Lobster Lab building since it was leased to the organization in April 1998, and reiterated their concern at a meeting last July. With plans for a waterfront park at the Hagerty Property moving forward, Bobo said the time is now to make use of the building.

"Since the Hagerty Property will soon be converted into a waterfront park, it's necessary to deal with the building now," Bobo said. "We needed to have communication between the Lobster Lab, the Hagerty committee, and the Maritime Institute. Hopefully, we can stifle the complaints about the building going to rack and ruin."

The Lobster Lab had planned to phase in improvements to the building over the next couple of years, but Bobo said a merger with the Maritime Institute could allow the structure to be used within a few months.

> "The two objectives are congruent. My dream is to have one unified group dedicated to coastal studies."
> — Board of health member Stephen Bobo

"One of the purposes of the merger is to get the building used this summer," Bobo said. "We'd like to renovate the building to be a staging area for field studies and be a place where classes could meet in cases of inclement weather."

Bobo said the Lobster Lab has $25,000 on hand to use toward renovating the building, with a commitment of another $15,000.

Should the building be used this summer, it would be part of the new Center for Suburban Coastal Studies, whose program would include comprehensive training in watershed management, marine biology, environmental science, rowing, maritime skills, wooden boat building , and waterfront history.

The boathouse and Lobster Lab building on the Hagerty property would both be used in the new program, which is scheduled to be headed by a committee consisting of the head of the Cohasset High School science department, the head of the Cohasset Maritime Institute, Ulmer, a member of the board of health, and by an operating advisory board of local educators and technical professionals.

David Magnusen, chairman of the mathematics and science departments at the high school, is to serve as the initial director of the center during its inaugural season this summer. Magnusen created the curriculum of the Maritime Institute along with fellow middle-high school teachers Patricia McGrail and Jack Buckley.

Girls tennis squad reloads

By Andrew Mahoney
STAFF WRITER

There's a new look to the Cohasset High girls tennis team this year, and it goes further than the new uniforms the squad is sporting.

After back to back 10-0 seasons in the South Shore League, the Skippers are going through a youth movement. But Gigi Meehan's squad won't be rebuilding, they'll be reloading.

"I think a lot of coaches might look at a situation like this and say we're rebuilding," said Meehan. "That's not how I feel at all. I think this is going to be a real solid year for us, even with the new girls."

Of the 12 girls on the team, five are freshmen, all of whom Meehan is excited about.

"We lost a lot of experience from last year," said Meehan. "But we've got five freshmen coming in. We've got some really good athletes and tennis players."

"I think a lot of coaches might look at a situation like this and say we're rebuilding."
Gigi Meehan

Meehan is still working out the kinks on her line-up, giving everybody a fair shot. In the season opener against Hanover earlier this week, senior captain Kate Stone got the nod at first singles, and delivered with a 6-1, 6-0 win.

"She does her job as the captain," said Meehan. "She's really taken on a leadership role. She encourages the rest of the team. She's been great for team morale. She knows how to win. She's an incredible athlete and tennis player."

Freshman Lindsay Grossman could end up at number two singles, but was unavailable for the Hanover match.

"She's just an incredible player," said Meehan. "She's delightful to coach."

Freshman Julie Shea stepped up from third to second singles, and rolled to a 6-0, 6-0 victory. Meehan was then able to try something different at third singles.

Any of these girls could step into third singles. Meehan gave freshman Nicole Needle a shot, and liked what she saw. Needle battled her opponent but came up just short.

"It will be interesting to see how they do," said Meehan. "We're just in the beginning stages of doubles pairings. We have a lot of experience and talent. I think the pairings are good."

At first doubles, Ari Ashfar and Jessie Zerendow played a very strong match, but came up just short, losing 4-6, 6-7 (4-7). That evened that match at 2-2, which meant the second doubles would decide the contest.

Kelly Stone and Jessica Niessink won the first set 6-3 before surrendering the second set, 3-6. With the match on the line and everyone watching, Stone and Niessink were able to dig deep and take the third set 6-1.

The win kept the Skippers streak intact.

"For the last four years, we've beaten everybody except Scituate," said Meehan, who expects to get contributions from everyone on the team.

Senior Jen Meehan has been injured but will see plenty of action and plays an important role on the team.

"She is just an awesome athlete," said Meehan. "She's a great kid who has really taken on a leadership role and is very helpful."

Emily Dean has shown signs of improvement and will get an opportunity to compete.

"Emily is the most enthusiastic kid out there," said Meehan. "She's been working on her serve, and she just keeps getting better and better."

Girls lacrosse off to fast start

After scoring more goals in consecutive games than ever in their five-year history, the Cohasset High girls lacrosse team ran into a roadblock at Martha's Vineyard, leaving the Lady Skippers with a 2-1 record at the season's start.

Led by co-captain Jackie Kahn's five goals and sophomore attacker Kristin Sheerin's three scores, an undermanned Cohasset squad was unable to hang with the Vineyarders, a tournament qualifier a year ago. Despite a 5-0 run in the second half that brought Cohasset to within six, the Lady Skippers fell 17-9.

"We were missing five starters," said coach Cathy Gaudiano, "four of whom are seniors. That hurt. But the good news is that we got our freshmen a taste of top-flight competition, and that will help in the weeks ahead."

The top-flight competition was absent in Cohasset's opening two games. After knocking off Norwell and Scituate in preseason scrimmages, the Lady Skippers opened at home against South League rival New Bedford.

Behind four-goal games from co-captain Jenny Chastain and sophomore midfielder Suzanne Lynner, and hat tricks from Kahn and senior attacker Carolyn Cameron, Cohasset rolled to a 17-5 victory. Sheerin, with a pair of goals, and junior defender Maggie O'Connor's single tally rounded out the scoring.

Cohasset's first road victory came against Marshfield, a 15-1 romp. With a stifling defense anchored by sophomores Carlie Carter and Maggie O'Neil, and freshman goalie Gia Petrakis, the Lady Skippers had no trouble dismantling the first-year varsity.

Kristin Sheerin led the scoring with four goals, followed by Carter and Chastain with three apiece, and Kahn, Cameron, sophomore Emma Gardner and freshman Katie Portanova with single scores.

The Lady Skippers were to host Hingham on Tuesday, and then scheduled to travel to Sandwich on Thursday in two tough league contests.

Skippers take two from CM, Barnstable

The Cohasset High boys lacrosse team opened its Pilgrim Conference schedule by knocking off Barnstable 10-3 to run its record to 2-0.

Led by sophomore attackman Paul Previte's four goals, senior tri-captain Travis Moore's two goals and two assists, and senior tri-captain Kevin DeVito's solid 15-save performance in the nets, the Skippers appeared to justify the high regard of the team.

The Paul Sporn-coached Cohasset squad is considered by some as one of 15 teams in the hunt for postseason honors. The Skippers hope to contend for the Pilgrim crown. DeVito is touted as the player to watch in the league. DeVito, Moore and sophomore David DeVito are considered to be three of the area's top teams to watch.

Hosting Barnstable, the Skippers rushed to a 6-0 first quarter lead and never looked back. The Cohasset defensive trio of senior tri-captain Brad Powell, senior Bill Good and junior Geoff McWilliams stifled what had expected to be a strong Barnstable attack, as the Skippers extended their lead to 9-1 by the end of the third quarter, and then emptied their bench.

Other scorers for Cohasset included sophomore attackman Peter Kovach with a goal and three assists, junior midfielder Ronan Buick (one goal), freshman attackman Curt Kahn (one goal), and Kevin DeVito (one goal). DeVito moved to midfield when he was replaced by sophomore Kyle Weber in the goal. Freshman midfielder Robert Hickey picked up an assist.

The Skippers opened their season with an easy non-conference win over an inexperienced Catholic Memorial squad, 18-3. In that contest, Previte led a parade of Cohasset scorers with seven goals.

Cohasset was scheduled to host two Pilgrim rivals this week — Norwell on Tuesday, and 1999 Eastern Massachusetts semifinalist Falmouth on Thursday.

Golf team hits the links

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Led by a core of young yet experienced players, the Cohasset golf team is set to take on the South Shore League after narrowly losing twice to East Bridgewater.

"I am really pleased with the turn out we had this year," said Clark Chatterton, the athletics director of the Cohasset High School. "Between the high school and the middle school, we had something like 20 kids."

Led by sophomore Will Prendergast, this team is comprised of one junior, Ted Gledhill, seven sophomores and three freshman.

"Will is definitely our number one right now, but right behind him are Ted, [sophomores] David Bouchard, Jay Bertovich, and Will Moody," said Chatterton, who is still waiting to find out the total number of students in the middle school interested in playing this year.

Prior to the season, the Skippers knew they would be facing some tough competition in the South Shore League. This league features Norwell's Ben Spitz, who Chatterton said could be "the next State Champion."

All of the players, with the exception of freshman Rob Lehr, have been playing competitively since the seventh grade.

"We are very young as a team, but most of them have been playing for three years now, and they just have to start scoring," mentioned Chatterton.

By 'scoring,' Chatterton was referring to the type of matches in which high schools compete, two opposing players are matched up and 'score' represents the player who wins the most holes out of nine.

"In our first match, our three, four and five guys did all the scoring, and in our second match, our one and two did all the scoring. If you put that together, we would have two wins already," said an optimistic Chatterton.

The varsity team, currently practicing around three to four times per week, has not had it easy as the Cohasset Country Club is undergoing renovations. The repairs have eliminated the use of the putting range before practices and matches.

"That kid is doing awesome," said Meehan. "She's a good kid. She's a good tennis player."

Molly Flanagan is one of three lefties on the squad.

"She has a killer serve," said Meehan.

As for the rest of the season, Meehan likes what she has seen thus far.

"We've got good chemistry," said Meehan. "Sometimes the older kids don't get along with the younger kids, but not on this team. They're all very supportive of each other. It's tough, because they might think they're competing against each other, but it's a team sport."

THE DESIGNING WOMAN by Kathleen Fox ASID

UNMASKED TEXTURE

Damask is worthy of consideration if you want to introduce texture into your decorating scheme. This rich fabric, which was once used almost exclusively to cover pillows and table tops in opulent parlors and sitting rooms, is now a bold choice for window treatments, as well as upholstered furniture. Damask is instantly recognized by its pattern of alternating satin and dull surfaces, which may be woven of fibers ranging from linen and cotton to wool and synthetics. To further heighten its vivid appearance, damask is often treated with fringe and tassels. In terms of bringing warmth and character to decorated interiors, few fabrics are the equal of damask.

The warmth and charm that makes a room irresistible are the result of careful planning and coordination. The Designing Woman combines years of experience and professional training with innovative ideas. We'll review your personal tastes and objectives and guide you through the decision-making process. We offer complete interior design service and coordinate all elements of a room, including the window treatments, wallpaper, flooring, furniture, and accessories. Call us at 383-6411 to arrange a convenient appointment.

HINT: Damask also makes an interesting choice as a material for window shades.

Marathon mom to tackle Boston on April 17

just go downstairs at the spur of the moment and say to my family, 'All right, I'm going running, be back in two hours.' They need to know when I'm going to be gone."

Mary initially began running as a release, a way to get away from everyday stresses on the open road.

"Running was my peaceful time, where I could train alone and get some peace of mind," she said. "I can't think of another sport where you can do that. As I got into it, the runs got longer and longer and I though I'd like to try a marathon."

Mary's first attempt at completing the 26.2-mile marathon distance came at the Vermont City Marathon in Burlington, Vermont, in 1998. First-time jitters didn't slow her down much that day, as she ran a fast enough time to qualify her for last April's Boston Marathon.

She lived the dream of many greater Bostonians when she completed the famed Boston Marathon course last year, and said the experience was everything she hoped it would be.

"It was loads of fun," she said of a race which makes many tired just thinking about it. "It was great to run around and see the sights I'd always seen. From the earlier marathon, I knew that I could do it. Being my first Boston Marathon, I was definitely focused."

Though spotting Mary among the thousands of runners proved difficult, Robert said it was a proud moment for the whole family when she crossed the finish line.

"Last year, she looked absolutely fantastic," Robert said. "It was kind of hard to get a spot and then to find her. You wish you could follow along. But she did great."

Mary said her hobby has drawn the requisite raised eyebrow or two from people who find a four-hour run to be somewhat masochistic.

"Some people say, 'Why do you want to put yourself through that,'" she said. "After I finished the marathon, my kids said 'How could you run for so long?' But I liked it, because I don't think you have to be an incredible athlete. You just have to want to do it."

This year, Mary's training for the Boston Marathon has been slowed a bit by injuries to her calf and Achilles tendon. She said the injuries have made the training more difficult than last year.

"It's been a really tumultuous year," she said. "I didn't even start training until after Christmas this year. Because of the Achilles problem, I've also cut my runs short sometimes. I'd rather run faster to get it done, which isn't always the best approach to take. But now I know that I can do the distance, which helps keep me going."

While the Boston Marathon is the holy grail of New England road races, Mary also delighted in running the annual Cohasset Road Race By The Sea two weeks ago.

The road race was a family affair for Mary, who was joined on the 6.2-mile course by two of her kids, 12-year-old Callie and Michael, 14, both members of the Thayer Academy track team.

Callie was first in the girls under-13 age group with a time of 1:07, while Mary finished 4th in the women's 40-49 age group with a time of 47:59.

Michael, meanwhile, blistered the course in a time of 41:50, a pace of 6:45 per mile and good for third place in the boys 14-17 age group. His performance means he can also playfully chide mom abut being the fastest in the family.

"I think the road race is such a part of the town," Mary said. "I don't think people care so much about the results as much as having a good time and enjoying the course."

Callie and Michael will be joined by 4-year-old Maggie, 7-year-old Luke, 10-year-old Pete, and 16-year-old Greg in cheering Mary on as she runs the Boston Marathon again on Patriots Day. Robert said he is proud of the example she is setting for the family.

"I hope the kids see that you find the time to exercise, and you do it," he said. "You hope you set a good example that mom and dad are healthy and they're working out."

Mitzvah day at Temple

Congregation Sha'aray Shalom, 1112 Main St., Hingham, invites you to celebrate its fourth annual Social Action Day, Sunday, May 7, beginning with bagels, pastry and drinks at 8:30 a.m. and concluding with a community-wide barbecue from 12:30 to 2 p.m.

The event is more familiarly known as Mitzvah Day, because commandments that require us to give our time, money, efforts and talents to benefit our fellow man are fulfilled. Helping others is among the most fundamental of all Jewish virtues. By being involved in the varied activities available that day, everyone gets an opportunity to express Judaism's most profound belief that actions are greater than words.

If your inclination is to physical activity, you can sign up for the Walk for Hunger. Walkers will meet in the Temple parking lot, travel to Boston by bus, walk for about 2.2 miles, and be back in time for the barbecue at 12:30 p.m. If you want to stay closer to home, you can go for a one-mile walk at Wompatuck State Park, where All Paws Rescue has organized a "walk for homeless animals." Folks will also have a chance to do a clean up at area Scituate beaches. Those who want to can help create a blooming garden right at the Temple, or walk over to the Mary Martha Learning Center and help the folks there spruce up for spring. Families can decorate bird feeders to benefit South Shore Habitat for Humanity. Adults can sign up to give blood to the Red Cross. Those who want to can help make meals for Father Bill's Place in Quincy, or visit several senior citizens' homes to help them with house repairs, or create wonderful get-well cards for area hospitalized children.

All activities originate at Congregation Sha'aray Shalom, 1112 Main St., Hingham, at 8:30 a.m. For more information or for directions, call 749-8103.

Dust off the dictionaries for CEF's annual Spelling Bee

By Mary Sheppard
FOR COHASSET EDUCATION FOUNDATION

Tuesday, May 9, the Cohasset Education Foundation will hold its Sixth Annual Spelling Bee in the Cohasset High School cafeteria at 7:30 p.m. Historically, this event has been held in late winter months, with dozens of spellers, enthusiasts and audience cheerleaders. This year, the CEF board feels that better weather and longer daylight hours will bring out a record crowd.

"We wanted a spring date for the Bee this year, right before or at the beginning of spring sports," said Midge Stone, a Spelling Bee Co-Chairperson.

"We'd like to see a great turnout," said Cohasset Education Foundation President, Michael Hurley. "Public education is on everybody's agenda today, recently evidenced in the town meeting. CEF funds go beyond allocated budgets to support school programs, labs, and needed equipment which is proposed to the board by teachers and administrators."

In the past, the CEF has raised money for the Osgood Computer Lab, the Middle School Reading Program, the High School Foreign Language Lab, and the newly-formed Cohasset High School Summer Institute.

This year, the CEF Board reports that the foundation is addressing two proposals from the high school that would assist the photography lab in acquiring working equipment and improved lab conditions, and helping to fund the ambitious Summer Institute 2000 Program, which has expanded in its fledgling year from one maritime program to five programs, including maritime, organic farming, national field park studies, field biology and internships.

CEF Board members will once again sell tickets for the exciting annual European Trip Raffle. This year, winning ticket holders will be going to Paris, France. In past raffles, the winning ticket was airfare and three nights of accommodations at a European hotel. This year's ticket, the price of which remains at $25, represents airfare and seven, count them, seven, nights in a comfortable, conveniently located Parisian apartment, whose location, size, and style will be at the winner's discretion.

> "We'd like to see a great turnout."
> — Cohasset Education Foundation President, Michael Hurley

Nadar Afshar, a CEF board member and co-owner of Panache, a Paris apartment rental agency based in Cohasset, says that leasing a private residence instead of a hotel room has many amenities. In addition to the personal touches and more generous length of stay offered to this year's raffle winner, other delightful options are cooking and dining at home on your French balcony and following your own schedule while visiting the City of Lights.

"Dining in restaurants and cafes in Paris can get expensive," said Afshar. "If you want to stay in, you have more than just a bedroom and bath. You have a kitchen and living area, a balcony or terrace... it's nicer."

In addition to the 30 adult speller teams, approximately six teams of Cohasset students will be participating in the Bee this year. Participating last year in the Bee as a team sponsored by the CEF were the three top spellers in the middle/high schools, Rachel Doyle, David Ingber and Maura McKenney. Rachel Doyle, now an eighth grader at CMS, recently competed against other top area student spellers in the Patriot Ledger's 17th Annual Regional School Spelling Bee, after becoming the top speller at Cohasset Middle School this year.

Spelling talent, however, is not a prerequisite for everyone to participate in the Bee. Board members and past spellers and sponsors would agree that many just attend for an unpredictably exciting evening, the funny memories, and to raise money for our public schools.

Cohasset's own Silver Spoon Cafe will be on hand to feed the hungry. Deliciously prepared dinners or snacks will be available and plentiful, with part of the proceeds benefiting the efforts of the Cohasset Education Foundation.

Bob Detwiler of Norwell will be the Master of Ceremonies for the Bee. A Boston businessman, South Shore auctioneer, and married to Betsy Detwiler of Buttonwood Books in Cohasset and Hingham, Bob was the entertaining and unconventional auctioneer, who brought results, for the South Shore Art Center's fall fundraiser at the Atlantica Restaurant, and has agreed to oversee the CEF Spelling Bee this year.

For enhanced audience participation, a projector screen is being added to the competitive atmosphere this year that will display the correct spelling of the word as it is spelled out by a team member.

The Cohasset Education Foundation asks that those interested in spelling on a team as a single player ($75), putting together a team of three spellers from your circle of friends, neighborhood or work place ($225), or becoming a full or partial team sponsor, so call Midge Stone at 383-2281 or Bernadette Faulkner at 383-6918 as soon as possible, and be prepared for unpredictable fun.

A glimpse into local history

Drawings by former Cohasset doctor on display at library

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

It was a time when horses-drawn carriages were still the major method of transportation, silent movies were all the rage, and everyone wore hats.

The time was 1915, and the total population of the town of Scituate was only 2,500. Cohasset doctor and artist Tom Eames made cartoon-like drawings of Scituate Harbor at the time, and his drawings showcase both a dry wit and a fascinating look into early-20th century life in a coastal South Shore town. The artwork is now on display in the reference room of the Paul Pratt Library.

The drawings were unknown until recently, when Scituate Historical Society member Bernard Mackenzie came across the long-lost artwork last year.

Eames, who lived at 285 Jerusalem Road, was a physician by trade but also enjoyed painting. He originally sent two seven-foot scrolls as a gift to Scituate residents George and Doris Hauman, illustrators who received national recognition for their drawings in the children's classic, "The Little Engine That Could," by Wally Piper.

The Haumans left the scrolls with neighbor Catherine Levangie, who eventually passed them on to her daughter, Sally Carver of Marshfield.

Carver loaned the scrolls to Mackenzie, a friend, who immediately realized the importance of the artwork.

"The minute I saw it, I knew it was a historic treasure," Mackenzie said.

Mackenzie sought to make the drawings available to many in Scituate and the neighboring towns. He borrowed the scroll and divided it into 12 pieces, creating a calendar. He solicited advertisements from local businesses to pay for the initial printing of 1,000 calendars.

The reaction to the calendars went beyond Mackenzie's wildest expectations. The 1,000 calendars sold out, raising more than $14,000 for the Scituate Historical Society, and the project was named "Best Non-Profit Wall Calendar" by the National Calendar Awards.

The calendar shows Eames' artistic talent as well as his humorous take on life in Scituate Harbor in the early 1900s. Kids can be seen throwing stones at automobiles, which were still a relative novelty and drew the ire of many for their noise and for scaring horses.

One scene in particular illustrates the vast difference between Eames' Scituate Harbor and that of today. A crowd of children is pictured outside the Idle Hour silent movie theater on Front street, clamoring to see the newest in entertainment. Meanwhile, two sea captains stood nearby, smoking pipes.

Eames' Scottish heritage and disdain for the Irish are prevalent throughout the calendar. He pictures leprechauns performing mischievous acts, such as throwing nails on the gravel road to pop the tires of oncoming motorcars and sprinkling pepper into a horse's feedbag.

As Mackenzie writes in the middle of the calendar, Eames ignored some, ridiculed others, and painted caricatures of others, but it was all in fun. The artist even drew himself into the action, hitching a ride on the back of a barge in front of Severn's Drug Store.

To purchase a calendar, call the Scituate Historical Society at 545-1083.

Local man in prison for arson

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

David A. Stover, Jr., of 533 Beechwood St. was sentenced in Norfolk Superior Court to 3-to-3-1/2 years in state prison for arson.

The 32-year-old Cohasset man set fire to the house at 71 Doane St. at about 2:15 a.m. Aug. 28 that sent two young adults running for their lives.

According to published reports, Judge Malcolm Graham was not swayed at the trial on March 30 by pleas from friends and one of the victim's family members — Stover's former girlfriend, Lisa Laugelle, whose daughter was at home at the time of the fire, and her father, Rocco Laugelle — to give Stover probation.

In a telephone interview, Rocco Laugelle said he has known Stover's family well. He described Stover as a quiet young man.

"As bad as it was, my granddaughter was there and could have been burned, I wanted him punished but just hated to see the kid go to jail." Mr. Laugelle said.

He had hoped that Stover would get probation with community service.

Laugelle said he "thought about it for a long time" before asking the judge for leniency. He said after the fire Stover stopped his daughter one day on the street to tell her how sorry he was.

"He was very remorseful," Laugelle said.

Stover was arrested following a 3-1/2 week investigation and charged with entering a dwelling in the nighttime with intent to commit a felony and burning a dwelling, Det. Rick Grassie said.

Grassie, who investigated along with the state Fire Marshall's office said they quickly determined the fire was of suspicious origin due to evidence found at the scene.

Evidence gathered at the scene and information from interviews with family and friends led to the issuing of the warrant for Stover's arrest, Grassie said.

As part of a plea-bargain agreement, Stover admitted to setting fire to the house, owned by his former girlfriend Lisa Laugelle, published reports said.

Grassie said Lisa Laugelle's 18-year-old daughter and a friend had to run through flames in the stairwell on the first floor after being awakened by a smoke alarm. They ran to a neighbor's house and called 9-1-1.

The cream of the crop

Students recognized for performance on MCAS exam

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Superintendent Edward Malvey receives a lot of phone calls, but one call he received last December still remains a fond memory four months later.

The Boston Globe called that December morning to inform Malvey that Cohasset's 10th grade students, now the junior class, had placed first in the state on the MCAS tests based on composite scores.

Seven of those students from the class of 2001 were recognized at last Thursday's school committee meeting for their achievements on the MCAS exam, along with two younger students whose performances on the test were similarly remarkable.

Current juniors Timothy Bilodeau, Benjamin Bixby, Casey Brewer, Susan Dane, Karen McMorris, and Clara Sceery were all awarded certificates for achieving perfect scores on the mathematics portion of the exam, while classmate Christopher Golden received a certificate for missing only two points on the essay-laden English portion.

Middle-High School principal Curtis Collins said the showing by the class of 2001 brought Cohasset High tremendous statewide respect and ensured the class a lasting legacy.

"When the scores came out, we asked the class to come down to the auditorium for an impromptu rally," Collins said. "They were kind of down from losing to the seniors in a rally and powder puff football. I told them they were the cream of the crop in the Commonwealth that day."

While the outstanding performance of the current junior class on the MCAS exam has been well documented, two other students in the school system also achieved scores on the test worthy of recognition last Thursday.

> "While the rest of us struggle to be good at what we do each day, you achieved perfection."
> — School committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo

Allison Moje, now a ninth-grader, received a certificate for achieving a perfect score on the English portion of the eighth-grade MCAS test, while current fifth-grader Colleen Richardson was awarded a certificate for her perfect score on the fourth-grade MCAS math exam.

The performances by Allison, Colleen and the seven members of the class of 2001 placed the students in the top one percent of those in the state who took the MCAS exam last spring.

In addition to awarding certificates to the students, superintendent Edward Malvey read a letter from Mass. Board of Education chairman David Driscoll congratulating the students for their outstanding achievement on the MCAS exam.

School committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo said he was filled with pride after hearing Malvey's message on his voice mail notifying him of the class of 2001's state-best performance on the MCAS exam.

"I want you to understand what your accomplishment has meant to this town," DeGiacomo told the students in attendance last Thursday. "While the rest of us struggle to be good at what we do each day, you achieved perfection. People in town felt so much pride that Cohasset was number one. Everyone held their head up high, whether they had a student in the grade or not."

As a result of the scores illustrating the quality of education in the Cohasset school system, DeGiacomo said the students' achievement may have helped garner votes for the $41.8 million renovation of Deer Hill Elementary School and the middle-high school. The project was passed by a two-thirds majority at last month's annual town meeting and was approved at Saturday's override election.

"Your performance got us votes," DeGiacomo said. "You've helped to get us better schools for students in the future."

While much of the work of the school committee and school administrators in recent months has been spent working on plans for the renovation project and attempting to find solutions for an increasing deficit in special education, Collins said the achievements of the town's students on the MCAS exam served as a reminder of the excellent quality of education in Cohasset schools.

"Sometimes, people take for granted what they have," Collins said. "I would measure our students against anyone's - public, private, or parochial.

Plymouth native publishes groundbreaking children's book

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

She is helping to ease the pain of losing a child through the magic and heartfelt warmth of her writing.

Plymouth native and former home care nurse Elissa Al-Chokhachy has recently published her first children's book "The Angel With the Golden Glow."

In this touching work, Al-Chokhachy tells the story a small angel from Heaven who goes to earth and occupies the body of a very ill baby.

The story focuses on how the baby brings a great deal of joy to the people who love him, before he passes away and makes his ascent back to Heaven. It is a fictional piece based on a true story Al-Chokhachy lived in her former job as a home care nurse for Hospice of the North Shore.

"My first love is hospice nursing," Al-Chokhachy said. "It's a passion for me. And my faith was my greatest asset when I served as hospice nurse. I know life goes on."

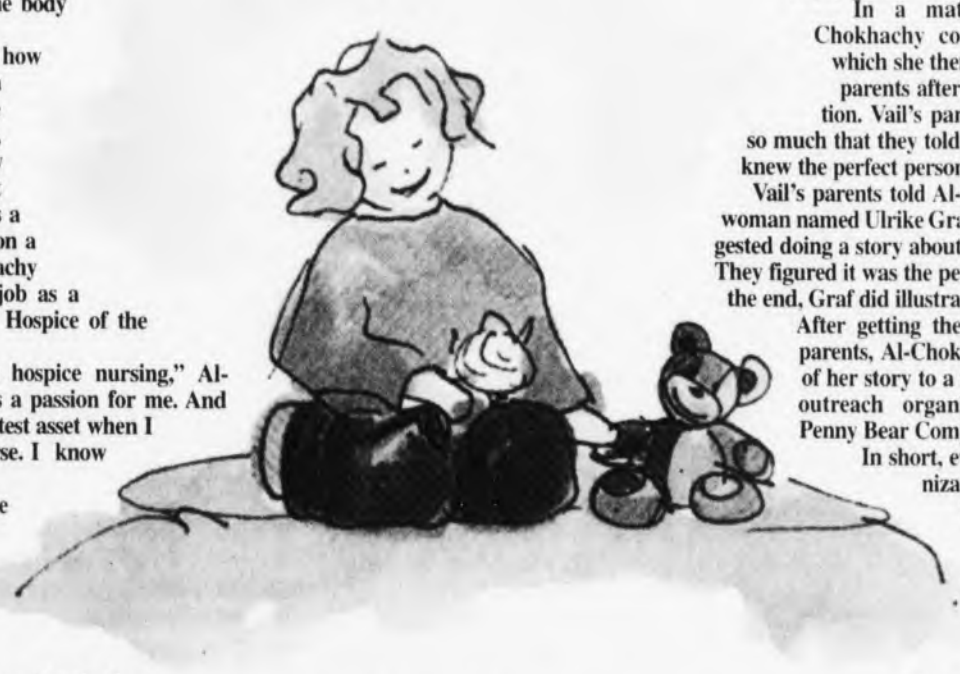
She said hospice nursing can test your faith at all times as through the process of dying with many people.

"It would've been hard to do the job if I didn't have any faith," she added.

Fate put fact into fiction for Al-Chokhachy.

"I happened to be placed in the home of a 14-month-old baby named Vail with a rare neurological disorder," Al-Chokhachy recalled. She said the small boy required around-the-clock care. She lived and worked at his home for at least 60 hours per week.

"My time there was pretty remarkable," Al-Chokhachy said. "Up until that point, I had only cared for adults. Before I actually took the job (caring for the baby), I had turned it down three times. But as it turned out, I was perfect for the job. As (Vail's) condition worsened, I was with him and his mom and dad every step of the way. In the short time that child was on the earth, he got a lifetime's worth of love."



Al-Chokhachy said Vail died four months after she took the job at just 18 months of age. Al-Chokhachy said one of the things that blew her away was the unconditional love Vail's parents gave him despite his condition. They didn't treat the child any differently than if he were a normal, healthy baby.

"They made every second count," she said of Vail's parents. "I was blown away, and this whole thing had a huge effect on me. We all grew together through our time with Vail."

Al-Chokhachy said the night Vail died, she stayed at the home until the next morning. When she left, she went home and went straight to bed, exhausted.

"Three hours after I had gone to bed, I woke up and had a story in my head," Al-Chokhachy explained. "It wasn't a dream, it was more like a vision. I had chills running through my body and tears flowing from my eyes. Nothing like it had ever happened to me. I grabbed a pad of paper and started writing."

In a matter of days, Al-Chokhachy completed her story which she then presented to Vail's parents after much self-deliberation. Vail's parents liked the story so much that they told Al-Chokhachy they knew the perfect person to illustrate it.

Vail's parents told Al-Chokhachy about a woman named Ulrike Graf who had once suggested doing a story about Vail before he died. They figured it was the perfect coincidence. In the end, Graf did illustrate the work.

After getting the approval of Vail's parents, Al-Chokhachy faxed a copy of her story to a friend of hers at the outreach organization called the Penny Bear Company.

In short, everyone at the organization said they loved the story, and in fact, the Penny Bear Company offered to publish the book.

"Within three weeks of Vail's passing, I had the story, the illustrator, and the publisher," Al-Chokhachy said.

And since the book has hit the shelves, Al-Chokhachy has been receiving an excellent response from children and parents alike. She has received favorable book reviews has been

Science Center hosts 30th anniversary celebration

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

People are living longer. The world is getting bigger. The earth's population needs to be aware of the repercussions of not taking good care of the planet.

Saturday marks the 30th anniversary of Earth Day, a day dedicated spreading awareness about protecting the planet and its precious resources. For the eighth year in a row, Norwell's South Shore Natural Science Center will host an educational celebration for the day from 12 to 4 p.m.

Earth Day got it's official start in 1969 after nearly a decade of grass roots campaigning by U.S. Senator Gaylord Nelson Nelson began his push for a day to bring the environment into the limelight in 1962. Today, Earth Day celebrations take place throughout the country, each April.

Joan Reid, the publicity coordinator for the center, said the event will be family oriented, and will present a number of educational activities and games as well.

"It's a family celebration revolving around the earth and taking care of its environment," Reid said. "It's not a hardcore environmentalist day. It's a family day."

"One of the main goals of the event is for people to get an awareness and an appreciation of what's in their own back yard. We all have to learn to appreciate what we have and to take care of it. That is what Earth Day is all about."

South Shore Natural Science Center Director Martha Twigg

Science center director Martha Twigg said members of a number of state environmental organizations including the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) and the Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) will be on hand to make presentations and answer questions.

And several local environmental organizations like the North and South Rivers Watershed Association will also take part in the afternoon event.

For children, games, face painting, a petting zoo, nature walks and craft making will make the Earth Day celebration educational and fun, Reid said.

There will also be live musical performances at the event featuring Michael Corbett (Irish and North American folk music), James O'Brien (political folk songs), The Cactus Duo, Gina Golden (Texas infused folk and blues music), and the duo of Bob Alonge and Jim Palana.

"The celebration will be informational," Reid said, "but it will also be fun. People can just hang out, and learn a little bit about protecting the earth."

"One of the main goals of the event is for people to get an awareness and an appreciation of what's in their own back yard," Twigg said. "We all have to learn to appreciate what we have and to take

Simple Sherbets

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

The first problem with sherbet is trying to define it. My definition is simple – sherbet is sorbet (a frozen and sweetened fruit ice) with dairy products (usually milk, although light cream, heavy cream, sour cream, and buttermilk are all possibilities). They can be made just with fruit juice as with a lemon sherbet or one can add puréed fruit as well, as with strawberries, melon, or tropical fruits such as mango or papaya. They can be made quickly and easily in an inexpensive ice cream maker. The question is, how does one get just the right balance of sweetness and texture while emphasizing the natural flavors of the fruit itself?

My first test involved the use of egg whites, a common addition to many sherbet recipes. Usually, the foamed whites are added to the base before freezing, which produces a light, not very flavorful ice. However, I did come across a recipe in James Beard's American Cookery which called for stiffly beaten egg whites that are folded into a partially frozen base. The result was disappointing: crumbly and grainy straight from the machine; hard, icy, and not very flavorful after freezing.

The next step was to determine whether a sherbet should be made with milk only or with a combination of milk and water. I started with milk and water and, except for the citrus sherbet, the results were disappointing – I ended up with snowy, fine flakes, which were icy and very bland. I then used only milk and this worked well, producing a creamier, more intense sherbet. I still wanted more flavor so I followed a tip from Julia Child, who suggested processing lemon or lime zest with half the sugar in a food processor, a technique that boosted the flavor significantly as a result of the release of the citrus oils.

I played with the level of sugar and left it at one cup for the citrus sherbet and 3/4 cup for flavors which use puréed fruit as a base. I also discovered that a small amount of honey makes a nice addition to many sherbet flavors and that alcohol was crucial to a smooth, not icy texture - two tablespoons being just the right amount. I also played with other liquids instead of milk (cream, buttermilk, etc.) but found that milk was best, producing the cleanest, simplest flavor which did not compete with the fruit.

I was left with only one question: Why did the milk not curdle when added to the lemon juice? According to one source, the sugar buffers the milk so that it does not curdle. Rather, it thickens when the lemon juice is added. A scientist at the University of Massachusetts thought that the amount of lemon juice is insufficient to cause significant curdling and that any curdling that might take place would end up being dispersed in the network of ice crystals. He went on to say that this small amount of curdling would actually assist in the gelling of the sherbet, giving it a creamier texture.

Citrus Sherbet

This sherbet has a bright citrus flavor, not too rich or sweet, and a creamy texture (scoopable directly from the freezer) with just a hint of iciness that lightens the texture. You don't have to process the sugar and zest together, but the sugar will dissolve faster if you do. Instead, the zest can be grated directly into the sugar/lemon juice mixture.

fi cup fresh lemon or lime juice
1/2 cup water
2 tablespoons vodka
1 cup sugar
Zest from 1 large lemon or lime, removed with a vegetable peeler in strips
1 cup very cold whole milk

1. In a large measuring cup, combine the lemon juice, water, and vodka. Process the sugar and zest in a processor, using on/off turns, until the zest is finely chopped. Add to the lemon juice mixture, and stir until the sugar is completely dissolved and the mixture is syrupy.

2. Chill until the mixture reaches 40 degrees, then transfer to the freezer if necessary to bring the temperature down to 38 degrees, about 10 minutes more. (This step is unnecessary if you are using an expensive electric machine, such as Simac, which has a built-in freezer unit.) Add the milk and stir well to combine. Freeze in an ice cream machine following manufacturer's directions. Scoop into a plastic container, seal well, and transfer to the freezer for several hours.

Master recipe for fruit sherbet

It is a good idea to taste the mixture before chilling it, adjusting the sugar, honey or preserves, lemon juice, and alcohol if necessary. Underripe or dull fruit makes a lousy sherbet, so don't bother. Although most sherbets are best served the day they are made, I found this recipe produced a dessert that could be frozen and then served days later. The sherbet will be a bit icier but still relatively smooth.

3 to 4 cups fruit
3/4 cup sugar
2 to 3 tablespoons fresh lemon or lime juice
2 tablespoons vodka or light rum
1 to 3 tablespoons good quality preserves or honey
1 to 1 1/4 cups very cold whole milk

1. In a food processor, process the fruit until it is fairly smooth. Transfer to a large measuring cup. Return 2 cups of the puree to the processor bowl and add the sugar, lemon juice, vodka, and 1 tablespoon of preserves. Process until the sugar is dissolved and the mixture is syrupy. Taste the mixture, adjusting the sweetness to taste by blending in lemon juice or preserves as needed. If using berries and/or preserves, you may wish to strain to remove the seeds and any pieces of unblended fruit. However, I find this unnecessary, since chunks of fruit or preserves simply add to the texture.

2. Chill until the mixture reaches 40 degrees, then transfer to the freezer if necessary to bring the temperature down to 38 degrees, about 10 minutes more. (This step is unnecessary if you are using an expensive electric machine, such as Simac, which has a built-in freezer unit.) Add the milk and stir well to combine. Freeze in an ice cream machine following manufacturer's directions. Serve immediately, or scoop into a plastic container, seal well, and transfer to the freezer for 2 hours to firm. (Most home ice cream machines cannot get the mixture cold enough to serve immediately. A short stay in the freezer is usually advisable to firm up the texture.)

Cantaloupe variation

Use 4 cups of cubed melon which will yield about 2 cups purée. Follow the master recipe using 3/4 cup sugar, 3 tablespoons lime juice, 2 tablespoons vodka, 1 to 2 tablespoons honey, and 1 cup milk.

Mango variation

Use 3 cups cubed mango to yield 2 cups purée. Add 3/4 cup sugar, 3 tablespoons lemon or lime juice, 2 tablespoons light rum, and 1 1/4 cups milk. Honey may not be necessary.

Strawberry variation

Use 4 cups whole berries to yield about 2 cups purée. Add 3/4 cup sugar, 2 tablespoons lemon juice, 2 tablespoons vodka or light rum, 3 tablespoons strawberry preserves, and 1 1/4 cups milk.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

Most people are already familiar with astrological sun signs — those presumed indicators of personality and future. There are, however, much more telling influences, as anyone who has studied astrology knows.

I try to do something a little different with my astrological forecasts. I like to compare astrology with meteorology. Just as meteorologists predict the physical weather — if there will be sun or precipitation — an astrologer can forecast the mental and emotional weather ahead.

A meteorologist tells you whether to bring an umbrella or sunglasses to work. By charting the course of the heavens and the various effects of celestial spheres on the human condition, I can tell you what type of day we are likely to have and how people are likely to react. My goal is to help you be prepared for the week ahead.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 12

A lunar polarity to Neptune urges you to stay alert and use common sense this morning. People may be feeling tired and can be careless, forgetful, easily distracted. On the other hand, this day is ideal for vacationing. Be sure to take extra time out to pursue favorite sports, hobbies, social activities. The moon travels in playful Leo all day. Mercury moves into Aries at 8:17 p.m., remaining there until April 29.

THURSDAY, APRIL 13

Potentially disruptive influences are in effect until 11:03 a.m. Wake up in a good mood. Take it slow and easy. Storm clouds move out late morning, and the remainder of the day rates high across the board. It is okay to initiate new activities between 11:03 a.m.-5:14 p.m., when the Leo moon aligns with the sun and becomes inactive. Kick back, relax and enjoy the good things in life this evening.

FRIDAY, APRIL 14

The moon enters practical Virgo at 3:19 a.m. Organizations and efficiency become principal themes today and tomorrow. It's time to get your life in order. Zero in on physical fitness, diets, self-improvement programs. Stock up on healthy foods and vitamins. Take better care of yourself. Tackle jobs that require mental precision and attention to detail; you can be most productive. New starts across the board are recommended.

SATURDAY, APRIL 15

The combination of a Virgo moon and Mars/Saturn alignment make this a day to get things done. Roll up your sleeves and take on a full agenda. You can get big projects out of the way. Focus on commitments and promises you have made to others; not is the time to fulfill them. Sidestep worries, self-doubt, anger. Channel your energy into constructive pursuits. The Virgo moon aligns with Mars and Saturn and becomes inactive at 9:45 a.m. The Mars/Saturn alignment culminates at 4:27 p.m., 17-degrees Taurus.

SUNDAY, APRIL 16

The final buildup to this month's full moon begins at 8:36 a.m., when the moon enters Libra. This full moon will culminate Tuesday afternoon. Harmonious alignments of Venus/Pluto and Mercury/Neptune save the day. The green light is on for new beginnings in your personal life. Stop sitting on the fence and be more decisive. This day is prime for meeting people and establishing new relationships or for strengthening ties in existing partnerships. Let loved ones know how much they mean to you.

MONDAY, APRIL 17

A full moon buildup promises a hectic day. Keep a cool head. Know where you are going and what you want to accomplish. You can be most productive, if you are well organized. The Libra moon continues to place the focus on partnership and relationship matters. You may be forced to confront the realities of a situation regarding another. Take extra quiet time out for yourself; meditate for inner peace and vision.

TUESDAY, APRIL 18

Resolve to start this day with a peaceful, positive attitude. Don't let anything or anyone throw you off course. This full moon culminates at 1:41 p.m. at 29-degrees of Libra/Aries. A Scorpio moon takes over at 3:35 p.m. Sleep on new decisions and don't take action until Friday, when favorable influences occur. Keep your nose to the grindstone. Hard work will pay off.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 19

The sun enters Taurus at 2:40 p.m., remaining there until May 20. The moon travels in serious Scorpio all day. A 90-degree alignment of Mars and Uranus takes center stage, however. Don't take chances or do anything risky. Travel with care. Avoid potentially volatile situations or people. Give others lots of freedom and space. Prayer and meditation can help you to gain deep, penetrating insights and find new meanings.

in demand for book signings. In fact, Al-Chokhachy will sign books from 12 to 2 p.m. Saturday at the Waldenbooks at the Independence Mall.

"It's been remarkable to hear from parents and children who have gone through this sort of thing, and who have read the book. I don't know if there's anything harder in the world than losing a child. People don't know what to say to parents who have lost a child, and I'm hearing that many people are giving my book to grieving parents as a present. If my book teaches one lesson, it's that healing comes through remembrance. Love is eternal. Love is continuous."

Al-Chokhachy said she felt so inspired writing "The Angel With the Golden Glow" that she is currently writing more children's books.

Her second book is due out at the end of August and it is titled "How Can I Help Papa." It is a book which addresses children who have a terminally ill loved one in their lives. Graf is also illustrating that book.

Al-Chokhachy said she also has a third book in the works which is geared more toward adults. She said the book is a collection of stories from different people who have had a given deceased loved one appear to them.

"It's a book of hope," she said. "It's a collection of people's first hand experiences with this sort of thing."

These days, Al-Chokhachy is making writing her full-time job, but she still manages to do some interim hospice nursing at the same time.

"Writing for me is about personal fulfillment," Al-Chokhachy said. "It's not really about being an author. It's more about helping people." Her road to writing was one she never planned.

"It was that little angel that showed me the way," she said.

For more information on "The Angel With the Golden Glow," e-mail Al-Chokhachy at ElissaAmal@aol.com or visit the book's site at www.AngelwiththeGoldenGlow.com care of it. That is what Earth Day is all about."

"The day helps to instill a sense of stewardship into people," Twigg said. Protecting water resources, improving recycling efforts and preserving the wildlife habitats that surround us will all be focused on during the day, Twigg said. "We will be doing activities through which families can learn a lesson together. One of those lessons people will learn is that we all have to be aware that our natural resources are finite. And it's good that young children learn that particular lesson at a young age."

Bill Stanton, the executive director of the watershed association, said he looks forward to setting up his organization's table at the science center every year.

"For me, Earth Day is a day in which we can keep the public informed about the status of the earth. A clean environment is a quality of life issue, and if we have days like Earth Day, we can really reinforce that fact, Stanton said. "Earth Day is also a matter of community in that everyone can pitch in and help and have fun at the same time. That's why I think Earth Day has survived all of these years."

SOUTH SHORE REAL ESTATE

Robust real estate market is here to stay

By Paula Woodhull

The good times just keep rolling for real estate on the South Shore.

That's the good news according to those who have experienced the ups and downs of the south of Boston real estate market, an area that regional planners have labeled "a new growth frontier."

Prices have risen steadily during the last three years, mostly due to a limited supply, strong demand and a good economy.

"In every corner of the state, the healthy economy has people feeling confident and financially secure, and they're taking advantage of this present period of prosperity to buy homes," said Fred Meyer, president of the Massachusetts Association of Realtors.

Is the bubble likely to burst anytime soon? Not in a big way, although the chief economist for the National Association of Realtors recently issued a report that warns of storm clouds appearing on the horizon, but not until late 2001 or early 2002.

That's when the economy could become so over-heated that the Federal Reserve steps in and raises interests rates significantly to curb the threat of inflation. Such a move would have a slight cooling effect on real estate here and around the country, but would stave off the threat of a serious recession.

Any such concerns are a long way off, though, according to local realtors.

"The South Shore is in good shape. Residential real estate is going to be strong for some time to come," said Donna Chase, a vice-president of Hunneman-Coldwell Banker and a realtor in the company's Norwell office.

With the economy strong, sales are brisk, most notably at the higher end of the market where baby-boomers are purchasing larger homes, seaside vacation retreats and condos with money earned from stock and mutual funds invested in the high-flying stock market, according to the MAR.

That trend holds especially true in communities all along the South Shore, an area which attracts people who work in Boston's lucrative financial and high technology sectors but who want to settle in the south suburbs.

Real estate prices in coastal towns such as Cohasset, Hingham, Scituate and Marshfield are driven upward by home buyers in search of difficult-to-find, expensive waterfront property.

That upward pressure on prices reverberates through neighboring communities, from Weymouth and Braintree all the way down to Plymouth.

"The South Shore is very much in demand right now," said Loretta Harrington of Jack Conway & Co.'s Scituate office. "All the towns along the coast are booming right now."

Harrington said newcomers are lured by the quaint charm of the South Shore, the beaches, as well as the easy access to Boston for work and Cape Cod for play.

"You spend a little bit more but you're buying a richer lifestyle," said Harrington. "You can't beat it. It's not cheap, but it's not overpriced, either."

The town of Hull, just north of posh Cohasset, has been an undiscovered bargain for years, but that, too, is changing.

"Hull is picking up in price," said Harrington. A year ago, modest houses in that coastal community could be found for $100,000 and more, but now the least expensive listing is around $165,000.

Buyers who can't afford the more expensive coastal towns are looking inland to Hanson, Rockland, Abington, Hanover and Pembroke, and further south to Kingston and Plymouth, an area that has become more attractive to commuters with the reopening of the Old Colony commuter rail into Boston in 1997.

Real estate prices in these towns are on the rise, too, as demand for more moderately priced homes exceeds supply.

In rural Hanson, the sales price for a new colonial has jumped from $289,000 to $339,000 in the past year alone. The reopening of the commuter train has sparked a building boom there.

"Hanover is getting pretty pricey," Chase said. New construction there is in the $400,000 to $500,000 range.

Quiet, picturesque Norwell is desirable as well, where Chase said people are buying "absolutely charming" homes and replacing them with new construction.

Upscale towns such as Hingham, Norwell and Cohasset are seeing a trend toward "mega-houses" — very large homes with all the amenities selling for $500,000 and much more.

"So many people are doing well in this economy, those houses are selling," Chase said.

The next up and coming area, Chase said, will be Plymouth because there is still land available there for development, unlike most other communities on the South Shore where new construction suffers due to a shortage of land, driving the costs ever higher.

"We can still offer a new home for under $300,000 in Plymouth," said Chase. "That's the American dream."

Local residents complete real estate licensing course

Marshfield resident Joseph J. Zakowsky III, Kingston resident Stephen Downes Jr. and Thomas Merrill of Rockland recently completed a five-week course on the fundamentals of real estate sales at the Conway Country school of Real Estate.

Those interested in becoming licensed real estate agents can take the 25 hours of coursework to meet the state of Massachusetts' requirements prior to taking the salesperson's licensing exam.

Students of the Conway Country School of Real Estate also have access to professional career counseling to discuss joining the Conway sales team, although enrolling in the pre-licensing class does not obligate students to work for Conway.

Tuition is $180 and the classes are held at the Hanover Campus (at the intersection of Routes 53 and 139) Tuesday and Thursday evenings from 7 to 9:30 p.m. The next class starts May 23 and runs through June 22. For more information on this or future license courses, call (781) 826-0088.

The Conway Country School of Real Estate is a division of Norwell-based Jack Conway & Co.

Conway Commercial brokers sale of Nick's Seafood Restaurant

Conway Commercial announced the sale of Nick's Seafood Restaurant in Braintree.

The property, located at 941 Washington St., was purchased by Jerry Ann Realty Trust for $400,000, while the business and assets of the restaurant were purchased by Farragut Millennium LLP for an undisclosed amount.

The sellers, Nicholas and Patricia Fiorentino, owned and operated the South Braintree Square restaurant for 13 years. The 3,442-square-foot restaurant will undergo extensive renovations and reopen as the Farragut House Café early this summer. This will be the second location for the Farragut House; the original restaurant is in South Boston.

George Jamieson of Conway Commercial represented the seller exclusively in the transaction and procured the buyer.

Conway Commercial is a division of Norwell-based Jack Conway and Company. Founded in 1957 the company has more than 600 agents in 36 offices from Boston to Cape Cod.

Nick's Restaurant in Braintree will become Farragut House Cafe this summer.

Guaranteed loan program gives veterans a special financing option

By Carol Bulman
PRESIDENT, CONWAY FINANCIAL SERVICES

The Veterans Administration Guaranteed Mortgage Program serves our United States Veterans and Armed Forces, as well as spouses of deceased veterans, by allowing them to receive a mortgage of up to $203,000 with zero down payment to purchase a home.

The U.S. government guarantees each VA loan 100 percent, which means that in the event that the veteran defaults on the mortgage, the federal government steps in to bail out the lender.

The guarantee comes from a fund, similar to an insurance fund, which is partially funded by the government and partially contributed to by the veteran. The veteran's contribution is called a "funding fee," paid at closing or financed with the mortgage. The veteran who is more than 10-percent disabled due to an injury received during a U.S. conflict is exempt from this fee.

More than 13 million veterans have taken advantage of the program since its inception in 1945, borrowing about $360 billion to purchase and refinance homes in all parts of the country.

Where does the VA mortgage money come from? The money does not come from the U.S. government, who is actually not the lender but the guarantor. Some veterans wonder whether they need to visit the VA office to apply for the mortgage; the answer is no. Veterans seeking guaranteed loans should apply directly to the lender. The mortgage money comes from large investors like banks, mortgage companies and insurance companies who are willing to make these high-risk, 100-percent loans because of the government's guarantee.

Carol Bulman

Highlights of the VA Guaranteed Loan program include:

- 100-percent financing
- Flexible qualifying standards
- Attorney fees are capped
- Rates are comparable to the going rates
- A veteran can use his or her eligibility more than once (as long as he or she has just one VA loan out at a time)
- The VA loan may be "assumed" by a new buyer, as long as the buyer's credit checks out OK with the VA
- VA financing can be used for a purchase or to refinance an existing mortgage
- VA financing is available through many local lenders and mortgage brokers, including Conway Financial Services
- The mortgage process should not take longer than with conventional financing
- A mortgage specialist can qualify you over the telephone or in person, free of charge
- The seller of the property is not required to pay any of the veteran's points
- The funding fee paid by the veteran may be financed as part of the mortgage
- If the VA-guaranteed loan is assumed, be sure that a "Release of Liability" Form is signed to protect your credit in the event that the person assuming your VA loan defaults
- You will need your eligibility certificate. If you don't have one, your lender will give you a form to request one from the VA
- Anyone signing the mortgage note for a VA loan must be a veteran or the spouse of a veteran.

If you are a veteran, and you want to find out if a VA loan is right for you, CFS can provide you with all the information you need to make that decision.

For more information about VA loans or other financing issues, call CFS at (781) 681-9400 or (888) 831-1181.

Flowering trees for the spring

Part 1
Magnolias and cherries

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

During the early weeks of April, the long-anticipated signs of spring greet enthusiastic gardeners around every corner. Each day, Mother Nature applies another brush stroke of color to the broadening palette of the spring landscape. Gardens are dotted with emerging clumps of tulips, daffodils and grape hyacinths and the sweet perfume of deeply-tinted hyacinths fills the air. The subtle rusty-red and yellow tones of our native red maples continue to brighten our roadsides and wetlands as their fluffy blooms are electrified when backlit by the setting sun. A sure indicator of spring's arrival are the distinctive, resonating tones of spring peepers as evening approaches.

Green
thumbs up

Having endured six months of stark silhouettes and the drab browns and grays of winter, the welcome greening of our lawns and the appearance of colorful spring-flowering trees and shrubs send homeowners into a gardening frenzy. Garden centers are already bustling with activity as eager residents are anxious to get a head start on another growing season. Pretty pansies in every color of the rainbow have arrived, their smiling faces irresistible to young and old alike. Truckloads of healthy, robust nursery stock can barely be unloaded quickly enough to satisfy enthusiastic customers desperate to work the soil and perform their annual spring planting ritual.

Flowering trees for the spring landscape

Before making your selections, particularly of larger, more permanent woody plants, be sure to analyze your site and determine a suitable location for your acquisition based on the soil and light requirements of the plant and especially taking into consideration its ultimate size. Small scale, ornamental trees are usually preferred for foundation plantings, decorative elements, focal points or smaller properties. Larger trees tend to be better for open spaces where they can provide shade or screening.

Look for trees which offer multiple seasons of interest. While the appearance of flowers seems to be the primary concern of most homeowners, most flowering trees bloom for a very brief period, perhaps a week or two at most. Consider other attributes, as well, including attractive forms during the winter months, mottled or exfoliating bark, colorful fruit, handsome foliage throughout the season or fantastic fall color.

There are several early bloomers which can provide many of these desirable characteristics. The Magnolia family offers many handsome specimens of multi-stemmed trees with spectacular, lightly fragrant, spring blossoms, although nearly every season the appearance of their voluptuous flowers coincides with a hard frost which often spoils their magnificent blooms. Grow in deep, moist, acid soils to which organic matter has been added. They perform best in sun but will tolerate partial shade. Large, fuzzy, silky-gray flower buds appear in late summer and are attractive throughout the winter months. Mature magnolias may reach a height of 30 feet with elegant forms and lovely pewter-gray, speckled bark.

Magnolia soulangeana, commonly known as the saucer magnolia, may have blossoms up to 10 inches across. These showy, rose-pink and cream-colored flowers are so stunning that you can forgive the unsightly display produced by the petals once they drop. The star magnolia, Magnolia stellata, with glistening white flowers, tends to bloom even earlier, and is more shrub-like in habit.

Numerous cultivars of magnolias have become readily available in recent years which offer even greater diversity in bloom color and extend the bloom season. Several hybrids such as M. loebneri 'Leonard Messel,' M. 'Ricki' and M. 'Susan' produce lilac-colored blooms later in the spring season which often avoids the damage of late-season frosts. Additional varieties bear soft yellow blossoms including M. 'Elizabeth' and M. 'Goldfinch.' There is also a native magnolia, M. virginiana, commonly known as the Sweet bay or swamp magnolia, which produces very fragrant 2- to 3-inch flowers from early summer to early autumn with handsome, glossy leaves which persist late into the fall.

Another diverse and popular collection of decorative spring bloomers includes the cherries, plums, prunes, peaches and almonds, all members of the Prunus family. Adaptable to most soils, as long as they are well-drained, they require full sun for optimal flowering, which tends to be extremely fleeting. Some may be short-lived, but they are truly glorious in their prime. Weeping forms of cherries are particularly popular despite their brief bloom period and are often used in foundation plantings, their pendulous form providing beauty in all seasons. The pale-pink to white flowers appear in profusion prior to the appearance of their leaves in early spring. The cultivar 'Snow Fountain' has become increasingly popular due to its compact habit and colorful fall foliage, making it an ideal specimen for smaller properties or foundation plantings. P. 'Hally Jolivette,' which produces pale pink blossoms, is more shrub-like in habit but another good choice for smaller spaces. The purple-leafed plum displays white to pink-tinted flowers with contrasting handsome, dark foliage for a long season of colorful foliage. Members of this family are prone to borers and insects and should be monitored regularly to maintain healthy specimens.

Brudnoy AT THE MOVIES

John Cusack tries to remember any good times with Lili Taylor.

David Brudnoy
CNC Film Critic

High Fidelity (B)

Remember records? Those large black things with a hole in the middle that came in a cardboard container with pretty pictures on the front and information on the back? Rob (John Cusack) not only remembers them, he lives for them, surrounded by them in his apartment and doubly surrounded by them in his ramshackle Chicago store, Championship Vinyl. He operates the place with the "help" of a fat know-it-all (Jack Black) and a thin, cadaverously pale shy guy (Todd Louiso), often chasing away would-be customers if they're not hip enough. Actually it's unfair to say that Rob lives just for his records; he lives for them, to be sure, but he also lives for his grudges, his regrets, his list of top five rejections of all time. Rob addresses these concerns to the camera and also lives them out in front of us.

The movie is often hilarious, especially in those scenes where Rob goes back to his loves from the past (among them Catherine Zeta-Jones and Lili Taylor) to try to figure out why his romances, starting in junior high school, didn't work out. We realize that Rob is something of a jerk, though we still like him, and all of these former girlfriends had ample reason to dump him. He's obsessed now with his current girlfriend, Laura (Iben Hjejle, the prostitute-maid in the Danish film "Mifune"), whom he at first refuses to categorize in his top five rejection list but then enters her into it. He's in the midst of being broken up, as it were, since she is walking out on him, and he learns from her best friend, the yenta-ish Liz (Joan Cusack), that he has been something of an (expletive deleted) and deserves to be shelved.

Records and girls: Can life be more meaningful than that? Rob's story was told first in an English novel, set in London, and its transportation to Chicago leaves it no worse for the transit, as best I can tell, in that these characters are all sharply drawn and inviting. The women, with the exception of Lili Taylor, who always seems somewhat ghoulish, are all hotties, and Rob, though cute enough, is clearly deficient in the perfection department. He does, however, have it all over Laura's current boyfriend, Ian, a jerk with a New Age vocabulary, nicely and unselfconsciously played by a dorky Tim Robbins.

Rob and his duo of gawky employees live also, one should note, for other lists, like the top five songs about death, or the top five songs about failed relationships. And for the compulsives among the audience, Rob is also a kind of role model, having first stored his records at home alphabetically, then by genre, and now, as he rearranges them yet again, by when he bought them. The movie suggests that Rob, no paragon of self-confidence but somewhat deluded by his charms, controls reality by categorizing it, as he categorizes women and records. He is a modern man uncertain of his place in a world of increasingly self-motivated women, a nostalgic barely surviving economically in a world in which it is only the latest gizmo and techno-bauble that entrances the masses. Rob is Everyman in extremis.

Price of Glory (D+)

Much is made these days of the supposed need to stick minority characters into movies and TV shows, with the war cry "diversity!" bellowed from the lungs of the aggrieved protesters and echoing in the ears of the suits. Whether this is a worthy or lamentable trend, time will tell. But in its awkward first phase it leads to angelic portrayals of Hispanics, gays and other minorities, and to observance of the unstated rule that in TV commercials only white men be seen as bumpkins, with all black men seen as noble or at least not as doofuses.

Much will be made, on the benalf of this ridiculous movie, of the fact that it is chockfull of Hispanic actors, and people who haven't seen it but know that it stars Jimmy Smits, hot stuff on TV in "NYPD Blue" for a few seasons, may presume that it presents a laudable portrait of Hispanic life in the United States. It helps, of course, to actually see a film before praising or damning it - not that politicians and "community activists" go to the bother of doing so before issuing their stirring denunciations of films they assume to be insufficiently groveling to ethnic sensibilities. And for those who've seen it, the inescapable conclusion is that "Price of Glory" isn't worth the price of admission.

This is the story of a failed boxer, Arturo (Smits), who, in Arizona, raises his three sons to enter the ring and drives them to the edge of misery (and in one case, inadvertently, into serious harm's way) and his wife into frustration on a major scale. We see the sons as tykes, pee-wees, silver gloves contenders, and then as near-adults, with the youngest, Johnny (Ernesto Hernandez), sharing his dad's putrid values, the eldest, Jimmy (Clifton Collins Jr.), as the one without quite the stuff to become a champ, and the middle son, Sonny (Jon Seda), as the one who might actually become a world champ. The movie boils down to frantic scenes of Arturo demanding that his son's automobile have "nalgas" (stones, balls, testicles), that his sons have nalgas too, his wife trying to calm him down and his sons pummeling their opponents to a pulp or receiving the same treatment from their opponents in the ring, with a sinister Mr. Big (Ron Perlman) trying to get Arturo to let him promote his sons' careers. Arturo - whom his sons call "papi," colloquial Spanish for daddy - of course wants to manage his sons' careers himself, and we see the need of this obsessed man to have the glory that he thinks awaits his boys reflect back on him too.

Periodically, out of nowhere, somebody, usually papi, utters a word or phrase in Spanish, perhaps to assure audiences that this is an authentic portrayal. Throughout, everybody looks pained, including papi's long-suffering wife, as if the sheer moronic stereotype-laden venture weighs heavily on the actors' heads. One feels for them all. Ay, caramba!

Hanover songwriter gets personal

Kristian Montgomery releases 'Opening Water'

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Be it on a local, national or international level, the legions of modern-rock singer/songwriter types find their work cut out for them.

This is particularly for those seeking to probe the reflective and emotional depths of lyrics. For those artists, the trick is to offer these ideas honestly without falling into the dreaded sensitive singer/songwriter syndrome.

Hanover's Kristian Montgomery is one guitarist and bandleader has managed to convince area club listeners the task can be done. With his newly released first full-length CD, "Opening Water" creating a local buzz, and his new, independent, Hanson-based record label, Antihero Records, finding success Montgomery is pleased about the way his burgeoning music career is going, particularly after a number of years of trying to find the right route and dealing with recent personal loss.

"I think this will be a good year," said Montgomery. "Everything is falling into place. The label's going well and we're selling our CDs. We're also getting more and more people out to our club shows and most of them say they keep getting better."

It hasn't always been this easy for Montgomery. The singer/songwriter's vocal style and lyrics on many of the new disc's seven tracks partly reflect past struggles. At various points in the last four years, Montgomery has weathered the not-so-amicable breakup of his former band, Boston-based club rockers Bone Dry System (with whom the singer was nominated for a 1996 Boston Music Award in the "Outstanding Male Vocalist" category), the death of his father and the dissolution of a long-term relationship which produced a daughter, who currently lives with the singer/guitarist in Hanover.

Also during this time, Montgomery spent a few months out of the Boston area, travelling down south to play stretches of solo-acoustic club gigs in Nashville, Savannah, Georgia and parts of Florida. On one of these trips, the singer recollects in the jacket notes of his new disc, he "drove down south screaming at God the whole way." But, as Montgomery's band biography reassures, it was this experience, while becoming acclimated to the stripped-down, unaccompanied style of playing, that the singer believes facilitated a lot of personal soul searching and reflection.

From this transitional phase came the lyric ideas for "Opening Water."

"When I went down south to play for awhile I really and finally got a sure sense of what I wanted to do as a songwriter and musician. I think that the change of scene and getting used to another city's club climate had a lot to do with it. But by the time I came back to Boston, it was clear to me that the ideas for the songs were there all along. They just needed the right focus to be brought to light," he said.

Kristian Montgomery

Back in the Boston area by late 1998, Montgomery formed his current self-named five-piece band and began work on an initial two-song demo single as a primer to the current full-length disc.

The opening track "Apartment 11," is evidence of Montgomery's new focus. Like most of the album the track features edgy but melodic alterna-pop guitar surges, blended with lyrics detailing the singer's personal romantic breakup, such as the confounding line "(S)he said she just feels like drowning without me." On a similar note is the A-side of the previous demo single, "Idiot's Pace," which pauses reflectively on lines such as "(T)he things I do cost me many friends/But you know me, I don't need many friends," and finally resolves "I want to be back in your grace/But I'm at an idiot's pace."

Montgomery explains the personal circumstances that inspired the lyrics.

"After my daughter was born, my ex and I were living in different apartments in Boston, a good distance from our families. And she was living alone in the Back Bay apartment that we were both in previously. And the song "Apartment 11" is something to imagine what she might have been thinking or feeling in the circumstance. Whereas 'Idiot's Pace' is about more or less the same subject but from my point of view."

Musically, the disc is dominated by driving, high-powered guitars that are also melodically and rhythmically intricate, drawing comparisons to bands such as R.E.M., Sister Hazel and Montgomery's personal favorite, indie-cult favorites the Afghan Whigs. Montgomery benefits from the solid instrumental support of his band mates, who include guitarist Ron Johnston, pianist/keyboardist Mike Dardis, bassist Roc Telleria and drummer/percussionist Phil Grenier.

All of these players are from the Hanover/Rockland area, save for bassist Telleria, who hails from Nicaragua, a spot on the map that Montgomery and his bass player plan on heading to later this month. The aim of the trip is to play a series of club dates as well as in-studio radio spots in Telleria's Latin American homeland.

"I've pretty much lived near the ocean for most of my life. And I've found that the older I've gotten, the more bodies of water I've become familiar with. So I use 'opening water' as a sort of metaphor for getting older and gaining self-knowledge. It's very Hemingwayesque,"
Singer/songwriter
Kristian Montgomery

The day before departing (April 16), Montgomery and his full band have a live radio-spot closer to home, at Orleans' WKPE-FM (104.7), a station that has been good to the singer and his crew for promotion and airplay. Another is Worcester's WAAF, where DJ Carmelita, hostess of the station's Bay State Rock local showcase, offers her blessing with the quote "(I)f Kristian (Montgomery) doesn't get signed to a major label, there's something wrong with the industry."

Montgomery's chosen title of his disc reflects another major passion besides music, something he and his band mate plan to do lots of while in Nicaragua, sailing and marlin and sail fishing.

"I've pretty much lived near the ocean for most of my life. And I've found that the older I've gotten, the more bodies of water I've become familiar with. So I use 'opening water' as a sort of metaphor for getting older and gaining self-knowledge. It's very Hemingwayesque," Montgomery said. "While we're in Nicaragua, hopefully anytime we're not in the clubs or the radio stations we'll be out on the water, sailing or marlin and sailfishing. This is stuff that I'm just really into doing whenever possible."

Montgomery and band are booked for an important early-summer local club date, headlining at Cambridge's Middle East on June 23.

Getting the best price for the Chunnel train

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

George Hobica

Q. I'd like to take the Eurostar Chunnel train from London to Paris this summer. Am I better off buying my ticket in the United States or in London once I arrive?

A. You can get the best price if you buy it directly from Eurostar 14 days in advance. They're currently offering a fare of 69 pounds (or about $115) round-trip in second class if you stay over a Saturday night, or a two-night minimum stay midweek.

By comparison, the Rail Europe Web site currently lists a special fare of $89 one way, so you save $63 by going direct.

To reserve tickets with a credit card, call 011-44-1233-617-575.

Q. I recently wrote you asking how we could get a refund for the unused return portion of a "non-refundable" round-trip ticket on US Airways (my father died and we had to fly on another airline one way to get back home since US Airways had no available seats).

You suggested we write and explain the situation, enclosing a copy of the death certificate, and that the airline would refund our money, minus a service charge. I'm happy to report that they very quickly refunded the remaining portion to our credit card, and that they did not deduct the $75 service charge.

A. As I've said before in this column, airlines aren't heartless. If you have a legitimate problem like this and can provide documentation, it's worthwhile to contact the airline's refund department, even if it's a non-refundable ticket.

US Airways deserves praise for refunding your money in full, without the usual service fee.

I also heard back from the reader who was erroneously charged $75 for going standby on Continental in Key West. He got his money back within a week of writing the airline.

Q. I will be traveling to London in May. Because I wear a leg brace, I previously have rented a wheelchair to assist in long-distance walking and transported it as checked luggage.

However, I'm concerned about possible loss or damage to the wheelchair and I wonder if I can I request that the airline allow me to bring the wheelchair on the plane with me.

A. Many airlines will let you bring a folding wheelchair on board. Here are the regulations from Northwest Airlines (you didn't specify what airline you'll be flying on, and other airlines may have different policies):

"Northwest transports all types of customer personal wheelchairs, including folding, collapsible or non-folding manual wheelchairs, electric/battery-powered wheelchairs and electric-powered carts. Forty-eight hours advance notice and one hour check-in on day of departure is needed for any electrical equipment as we want to ensure meeting all dangerous goods handling requirements.

"Customers who take advantage of pre-boarding may request to stow their personal wheelchair on board. Wheelchairs stowed on board have priority over other carry-on items except those of through customers. Not all stowage locations accommodate all sizes of wheelchairs."

Q. I am interested in going to the mountains this summer and doing some horseback riding, preferably in the East. I have looked into dude ranches, but most of them are three star, and I am looking for something upscale. Any suggestions?

A. I don't know of any really upscale dude ranches in the East (most are located in the West, not surprisingly); if you'd really like to experience dude ranch heaven, head for The Home Ranch in Clark, Colo., (970) 879-1780, or www.homeranch.com). The ranch is rated four stars by Mobil and is a member of the prestigious Relais & Chateaux group. There's a seven-night minimum stay in summer.

For more ideas, the bible of ranch vacations is Gene Kilgore's "Ranch Vacations" 5th edition, published by John Muir Publications.

Christine Conley, a single mother of three, stands near the ditch in her front yard on Linden Drive. Septic contamination as a result of blasting in the area forced Conley and her family from their home.

Forced from her home

Town sewer project causes contamination

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

When it comes to protecting the health of her children, Christine Conley believes she can't be too careful. It's a lesson she learned well over the past year.

Something had gone wrong at her Linden Drive property last March following rock blasting for the North Cohasset. That much she knew. The first heavy rains following the blasting occurred May 24, and when she came home that day, she found her yard filled with water.

"I couldn't even get out of my car," she recalled. "The driveway and yard was just a lake. There was so much water and the water table was so displaced that a backhoe literally got stuck in the mud."

Conley, a single mother of three, became much more concerned when water began to enter the garage and lower level of her home, which included her family room and son Matt's room. Though a junior at Northeastern, Matt stayed at the house at some points during the summer and on school breaks.

"I'd lived here 23 years and never had a drop of water in my home," she said. "All of a sudden, the garage was flooded, the carpeting was flooded, and there was water in the whole first floor of my house."

Town Manager Mark Haddad said Conley did the right thing by immediately notifying town officials about the problem.

"When you're dealing with projects like this, there are inevitably going to be problems," Haddad said. "Christine called right away, and that's what I'm here for. If people have a problem, they should call me and we'll try to work something out. Unfortunately, Christine has had about the worst experience I've ever heard of."

Conley called Dan Coughlin of Tutela Engineering, the town's contracted engineer for the sewer project, to see if the problem could be resolved. Coughlin and John Albanese, a contractor working on the project, came to her home the next day to survey the damage.

"They said we'd landscape, put loom in, and that would hopefully soak up the water," Conley said. "But we were in a drought all last summer and I still had water."

Not only did Conley still find water seeping into her first floor on dry days, but she and her daughter, Alissa, now a senior at Cohasset High School, noticed a foul odor as well.

Conley felt her suspicion of possible septic contamination in her home was validated after ServPro of Weymouth came to clean up on June 4 after the initial flood at her home.

"If you have conviction about something, you have to act. You can't depend on other people."
— Christine Conley

"On the receipt, it said 'sewage cleanup'" Conley said. "I asked why it said that, and the guy from ServPro said, 'I'm not a chemist, but if it looks like sewage, and it smells like sewage, I'm putting down sewage.' I was pretty sure at that point that the problem was serious."

Fighting crime against seniors

Volunteers needed to develop initiatives

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

A new program of the Norfolk County Sheriff's Office will seek to offer enhanced law enforcement services to the town's senior citizens, while involving seniors in developing initiatives they would like to see instituted.

The TRIAD program will connect the town's seniors with representatives from the Cohasset Police Department and the Norfolk County Sheriff's Office in order to help prevent crime against seniors and ensure quick responses in cases of medical emergencies.

"The idea is to bring together the seniors with law enforcement personnel and make sure we'll all on the same page when providing crime prevention services to seniors," said Norfolk County Sheriff Michael Bellotti. "We want to work locally to develop tailor-made strategies to prevent crime against seniors."

The Cohasset TRIAD program is to be governed by a SALT (Seniors and Law Enforcement Together) committee, to be made up of interested seniors and town officials.

A meeting on the TRIAD program will be held at the Council on Elder Affairs on Wed. April 26 at 10 a.m. Anyone interested in finding out more about TRIAD or becoming a member of the SALT committee is welcome, Bellotti said.

The committee will be the driving force behind implementing TRIAD programs, which have been run successfully in other parts of the country.

"TRIAD is very big in the Midwest and down South," said Norfolk County Special Sheriff Courtney Cahill. "It's a national program."

Inaction could doom land bill

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The Community Preservation Act is one of the most popular pieces of legislation that may never win approval from the state Legislature.

"As soon as I found out what the CPA addressed, I realized it was a no-brainer," said Gary Vanderweil, a Cohasset resident and member of the Community Preservation Coalition. "To me, it addresses four important factors that need addressing: historic preservation, open space, affordable housing and recreation. This bill would be great because it could provide us with hundreds of thousands of dollars for open space."

If the Legislature does not approve the CPA by the end of the current fiscal year, which ends on June 30, 2000, it will not be eligible for reconsideration.

The CPA would provide a mechanism for cities and towns to purchase land for open space, to preserve historic structures and to fund housing initiatives. The CPA is stalled in a taxation conference committee while the Legislature debates the more than $21 billion state budget. The chairman of the Taxation Committee is also chairman of the Budget Committee. Until the Legislature completes the budget debate, the CPA will remain on hold. If the Legislature does not approve the CPA by the end of the current fiscal year, which ends on June 30, 2000, it will not be eligible for reconsideration.

"People need to be aware that even though two versions of the CPA have been passed by the House and Senate, there is no Act yet," said Marcia Molay, Director of the Community Preservation Coalition. "This bill went to the conference

Lobstermen feel trapped by sewer project

Say freshwater could hurt catch

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset lobstermen are concerned about a new sewer discharge pipe installed in Cohasset Harbor, which they believe may result in the death of lobsters stored in the harbor.

According to sewer commissioner Gary Vanderweil, the pipe will be the main discharge from the new sewer plant on Elm Street and will run down Elm before hooking into the harbor near Lawrence Wharf. The new sewer plant is to begin operating July 1.

"At certain times, I'm afraid that the extra fresh water will be toxic to the lobsters."
— Cohasset lobsterman Bill Stone

Many of the town's lobstermen store their daily catches in boxes that are floated to depths of between four and six feet in the harbor. Some of the lobster cars are moored about 200 yards from where the sewer discharge pipe goes into the harbor.

Because lobsters can only live in salt water, lobstermen are worried that fresh water piped into the harbor from the sewer discharge pipe will kill much of their catch.

"At certain times, I'm afraid that the extra fresh water will be toxic to the lobsters," said Bill Stone, who has been a lobsterman in town for 45 years. "You could be going along good and then get a big rainstorm. With the fresh water from a storm combined with the fresh water from the sewer pipe, a lot of the lobsters could die."

The town's lobstermen have expressed concerns about additional fresh water as far back as the 1960s. At that time, many of them appeared at town meeting to request that fresh water from the town's original sewer project be piped outside the harbor.

Those planning the current sewer project are aware of the concerns raised by lobstermen, but insist the

Help clean up Straits Pond

The recently formed Straits Pond Watershed Association (SPWA) will hold a spring cleanup from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m., Saturday, April 29, around Straits Pond, the 92-acre watershed that connects Cohasset, Hull and Hingham. An afternoon cookout is also planned that day from 1 to 3 p.m. at the Gunrock Playground, located across from Straits Pond on Atlantic Avenue in Hull.

The group will meet at 8:45 a.m. at the Gunrock Playground and begin the community cleanup effort for the tri-town area surrounding the pond. (The water level will be lowered to allow volunteers easy access.) Volunteers are asked to bring gloves and encouraged to wear boots and long-sleeved shirts. Plastic bags will be provided by the Hull DPW.

Straits Pond is one of 27 places in the state designated as an Area of Critical Environmental Concern. The SPWA is a new association made up of some 55 residents living near the pond who are working to improve the water quality and help local state and federal agencies with cleanup efforts.

SPWA president Lawry Reid applauded both the Cohasset and Hull departments of public works, most notably Harold Litchfield of Cohasset and Edward Parent of Hull, for their help with the cleanup. The group also praised town managers Phil Lemnios and Mark Haddad of Hull and Cohasset respectively for their environmental concerns and support.

A rain date for the cleanup has been set for Saturday, May 13. Those who would like to volunteer or learn more about the SPWA can call Lawry Reid at 925-8659 or email him at l.reid@viaspeech.com.

Feral cats: control and disposition

To reduce the risk of exposure to zoontic diseases carried by cats such as rabies, cat scratch disease, toxoplasmosi etc. and reduce potential property damage, the control of feral cats is imperative. In an effort to control these nuisances the Cohasset Board of Health establishes this regulation.

1. Upon the written complaint of three or more citizens, the Board of Health in conjunction with the town's Animal Control Officer (ACO) shall perform an investigation to determine the validity of the complaint. If the complaint is considered valid, the board shall request the ACO to trap the offending cats.

2. When the ACO suspects that there is a feral cat problem, he may, with the concurrence of the health agent, initiate a trapping program without a complaint from residents.

3. If a cat which is privately owned is trapped and the owner cannot be immediately identified and returned, the owner, upon claiming the animal must pay for the cost of its apprehension, feeding and care in accordance with a fee schedule developed by the ACO.

For a copy of the complete regulation contact the Cohasset Board of Health office at 383-4116.

Water board

At its meeting Thursday, April 13, the Board of Water Commissioners reorganized and elected the following officers: chairman, John K. McNabb; vice-chairman, Robert E. Kasameyer; and clerk, Richard D. Muncey.

Open Space survey

A survey from the Open Space Committee has been included in this quarter's tax bills.

Debbie Cook, chairman of the Open Space Committee, urges residents to take the time to fill out the questionnaire because the results will help the Open Space Committee define open space and recreation priorities during the next five years.

"Every five years the state mandates that towns file an open space and recreation plan. Our plan expires in June 2001, and the Open Space Committee is in the process of updating it. If we don't have an active plan, we won't be eligible for many state grant and loan programs," she said.

Forms are available in the town hall and library, and surveys may be left in the drop boxes at both locations.

The Open Space Committee is also looking for one new member. Anyone interested should call Cook at 383-6313.

School councils seek candidates

The Nominating Committee of the Cohasset PSO is seeking candidates to run for parent representative to Cohasset's three school councils.

Comprised of the principal, teachers, parent representatives and community representatives, each school council is charged with formulating and updating that school's improvement plan, missions and goals, as well as establishing focus areas to be studied each year. Parent representatives are elected for a two-year term by the parent body of each school and must have a student(s) in attendance at the specific school they are serving for the duration of their term. Council positions open for the coming two-year term (2000-2002) include one seat at Joseph Osgood and two each at the Deer Hill and Middle/High School.

Individuals interested in serving as a parent representative are asked to submit a brief statement about themselves and their interest in the school council to the PSO Nominating Committee, c/o Susan Jaffe, 10 Wood Way, no later than Tuesday, May 2. Balloting will take place May 8-12. New council members will be introduced at the PSO annual meeting, May 16.

For more information about council responsibilities or the election process, call Susan Jaffe at 383-9858.

Graves available

Gravesites at the Beechwood Cemetery are now available for purchase on a pre-need basis to residents and former residents who resided in Cohasset for a period of one continuous year.

The cost per grave is $725 for residents and $1,000 for former residents. Grave purchases are limited to two gravesites in any cemetery under the jurisdiction of the Town of Cohasset.

Anyone wishing to inquire about purchasing graves should contact the D.P.W. office either in person or by phone, 383-0273.

Time for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. and are held on alternate Tuesdays.

The next selectmen's meeting is Tuesday, April 25..

Train committee

Selectmen are still seeking three citizens to serve on the Greenbush Mitigation Committee that is negotiating with the MBTA about mitigation for the train. Interested residents should call the selectmen's office at 383-4105.

ConCom members

Selectman Merle Brown said the conservation commission needs associate members. A full member will step down in June and the commission needs to get someone on board as an associate now who can become a full member in a few months, he said. Anyone interested should call the selectman's office at 383-4105 or contact a conservation commissioner.

Water board really digs new tank site

Ground broken Monday atop Scituate Hill

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The weather for Monday morning's ground-breaking ceremony for the town's new Scituate Hill water tank may have been cold and blustery, but the broad smiles on the faces of the town's water commissioners showed they were feeling warm on the inside.

A group of approximately 15 town and local officials attended the ground-breaking for the $1.5 million tank, which located high off 3A across from Atlantic Bagel and Deli.

Construction of the tank itself was begun March 30 by contractor Pitt-Des Moines of Pittsburgh and is expected to be completed by Dec. 5. Site work is to be done by contractor Westcott Construction of Attleboro.

"This is the most significant new construction in the water system since the Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant was constructed in 1978," said beaming water commissioner John McNabb.

The $1.5 million project was approved at the 1997 town meeting band was funded by an increase in water rates.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the new Scituate Hill tank will provide two important functions for the town.

"First, it will help improve fire protection by increasing the water reserves for the town," Haddad said. "It will also allow us to take the Bear Hill tank off line in order to clean out sludge."

McNabb said residents will see cleaner and better-tasting water now that the Bear Hill tank can be taken off-line and properly cleaned.

"By flushing the water distribution system, we'll be able to improve the taste and odor of the water for all of our customers," McNabb said.

Water commissioners McNabb, Robert Kasameyer, and Richard Muncey each grabbed hold of a shovel for the ceremonial ground-breaking, after which they and selectman Fred Koed were presented with commemorative plaques featuring gold shovels by Dominic Tutela, the contracted engineer for the Scituate Hill project.

Koed was a member of the water commission and a leading force behind the tank in 1997, when the project was approved by town meeting.

The construction of the new water tank is just one part of a busy 2000 agenda for the water commission. Repairs are planned for the water treatment plant, pipes are to be replaced on King Street, Black Horse Lane, Holly Lane, and Stevens Lane, and the Elm Meadow and Sohier Street well-fields are to be rehabilitated.

"The year 2000 will be one of our busiest construction years ever," McNabb said.

Clarification on Gammons Point story

Dan Cotton, 27 King St., took exception to an article that appeared in last week's Cohasset Mariner regarding the recent land court decision upholding the validity of a deed restriction on "Lot O" at Gammons Point.

Cotton said that at the Dec. 15, 1998 meeting with selectmen he did not ask them to allow him to remove the easement as the article stated. On the contrary, he offered to withdraw his petition to lift the restriction in land court without prejudice but was not allowed to do so by the selectmen's 4-1 vote that affirmed they would enforce the restriction and intervene in any court action to enforce it.

"I did not ask their permission to withdraw the suit," Cotton said.

He also strongly objected to the use of the word "threaten" in last week's article. The story said Cotton threatened to overturn the easement in court and then followed through on his threat. At the Dec. 15, 1998 selectman's meeting, Cotton said the development restriction could stay as far as he was concerned if it remained "without prejudice."

"But your action will prejudice it," he told selectmen at the time. "I feel in the interest of my estate, I'll have no other choice but to go forward in land court if you do."

"I offered to withdraw without prejudice," Cotton said this week. "But they wanted it to go all the way." It took a year for the judge's decision. Cotton allowed the deadline for filing an appeal to expire without taking any further action.

SPEECH TEAM

Cohasset resident Liz Myers, a senior at Milton Academy and captain of the speech team, has had an amazing year competing for the Milton Academy Speech Team. On April 9, she won the state championship in the category of Children's Literature at the Massachusetts Forensic League State Finals in Lincoln. As a team, Milton Academy took first place.

Liz is also one of the six finalists who qualified in the category of Dramatic Performance to represent the Boston Catholic Diocese at the National Catholic Forensic League Tournament in May in Rochester, N.Y. She is also one of two finalists who qualified to represent the New England National Forensic League District at the National Forensic League Tournament in Portland, Ore. in June. She will be competing in the category of Dramatic Interpretation. These are the two nationally recognized speech organizations in the country. The speech team competes almost every weekend during the school year with meets held in Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

COLLEGE LACROSSE

Stephen Kovach, son of George and Joan Kovach of Ripley Road, is a member of the 2000 Hamilton College men's lacrosse team, with is currently 2-4 on the young season!

The Continentals will use a run-and-gun style offense this year, bringing a much more exciting brand of lacrosse to Hamilton. With the return of several key offensive threats and the addition of a quality freshman class that includes Stephen, the Continentals should turn some heads this season, says head coach Kevin Gilmartin.

Stephen is a graduate of Brewster Academy.

Experienced talent headlines The Music Man

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The Cohasset Dramatic Club's production of "The Music Man" features the combination of two talents rarely seen in local community theater.

Both lead actor Joseph Siriani, who will play the famous Harold Hill role, and director Maura Tighe have a great deal of experience to lend to the others working on the show, which will open May 6 and run through May 21 at Cohasset Town Hall.

Siriani was nominated last year by the Independent Reviewers of New England as Best Actor for his portrayal of the King in the Turtle Lane Playhouse's production of "The King and I" in Newton.

He has been acting ever since he can remember, even going out to Los Angeles to follow his dream after attending Northeastern University.

"I banged my head against walls, doing all the theater I could," said the affable Siriani, a father of two who works for the Hingham Water Department. "I did a lot of backstage work, taking any role I could get. It's a tough business to break into."

Siriani stayed in Tinseltown for three years before returning to Massachusetts. He began to act in community theater productions about eight years ago, and said he loves the opportunity to pursue his favorite hobby.

"I've had all kinds of roles," he said of his theater career. "I've played the Cowardly Lion in "The Wizard of Oz," which is extremely demanding on your body because of the hot suit. My favorite role was as Captain Von Trapp in "The Sound of Music." I didn't even really want to do it at first, and by the end of the production I didn't want it to be over. I fell in love with the show."

Siriani's baritone voice, which he describes as "pretty good," will suit him well in his portrayal of Harold Hill in "The Music Man."

"We couldn't do a show like this without an experienced actor in the lead role," Tighe said of Siriani. "He's really going to make the show. He's an excellent actor and he has great stage presence. He could act professionally if he wanted to."

"He's really going to make the show. He's an excellent actor and he has great stage presence. He could act professionally if he wanted to."
— Director Moira Tighe on lead actor Joseph Siriani

While he was thankful for the close proximity of his Hingham home to the show's rehearsals in Cohasset, Siriani said he was most excited for the chance to work with Tighe.

The owner of Tighe & Doyle Casting in Boston, Tighe directed professionally in New York for many years, at such theaters as The Public, Ensemble Studio Theatre, and The Director's Theatre Lab. She also worked as a casting director and talent agent in New York City before returning to Massachusetts to raise her family and begin her casting business.

She said she got the directing bug once again as her kids became involved in community theater.

"My kids were doing it, and I thought it would be fun to jump back in," said Tighe, who cast the independent film "Next Stop Wonderland" and recently cast the movie "State and Main," directed by David Mamet.

Because of the preponderance of male singing roles in "The Music Man's" 50-person cast, Tighe said it was hard to find enough men for the show.

"The challenge was to find the men to do it," she said. "But we've been lucky to get a lot of good, adult, male singers. We've got an awesome barbershop quartet made up of two guys from Scituate and two guys from Cohasset."

The leader of the cast will be Siriani, who said he is thankful for the support of his wife Lisa and daughters Alyssa, 11, and Sofia, 2, for putting up with his acting career.

"My family is so great about it," he said. "Alyssa always goes over my lines with me and Lisa is so supportive. Even Sofia gets into it. When I was doing "The King and I", I had to shave from the chest up. Whenever Sofia would see someone bald on TV, she would point and say 'There's Daddy.' I can't say enough about my family."

To see Siriani and the rest of the cast in "The Music Man," call 545-5499 or purchase tickets at Front Street Books in Scituate Harbor or Buttonwood Books in Cohasset and Hingham.

Joseph Siriani will play Harold Hill in "The Music Man" produced by the Cohasset Dramatic Club.

Election reflection

Before the annual town election becomes an old memory, we have some unfinished business to attend to. We'd like to thank those who served but decided not to seek reelection to their respective boards this year.

On the school committee Kathy Ofsthun and Betsy Connolly both worked tirelessly during a time when the school budget, facilities and programs were all under the microscope.

John O'Toole stepped down after serving many years on the planning board during a time the town was faced with the pressures of development.

Steve Wigmore served us well on the housing authority as did Steve Endris on the recreation commission. And Diane Sullivan was a dedicated selectman. Alix White served two terms on the board of health that has had the difficult task of dealing with Title 5, which strikes fear into the heart of anyone with a septic system, among myriad other issues.

We take our hats off to them all. Their countless volunteer hours in service of the town are deeply appreciated.

We would also like to congratulate the winners at the April 8 election — and their worthy opponents. Thanks to Bob Sturdy and Leland Jenkins for heightening the debate on the issues in the selectman's race this year.

There were also two young, political newcomers in the group of contenders.

Lance Norris threw his hat into the race for library trustee and gave us a contest. If it weren't for Mr. Norris, the race would have been a slam-dunk in a year when library issues are at the forefront.

And Randy Patterson, who is relatively new to town, is faced with a new cellular tower looming over his neighborhood from just over the border in Scituate. Mr. Patterson, who is fighting the tower, didn't just sit back and complain but decided to run for office in the hope of getting involved in town issues. We ran into Dean Rizzo this week and were reminded that Mr. Rizzo ran and lost a race for the planning board to an incumbent about eight years ago when he was a relative newcomer to Cohasset. But he didn't let that early setback discourage him. Mr. Rizzo and his wife Barbara Anglin went on to become involved in several town committees. Mr. Rizzo put innumerable hours and boundless energy into the village revitalization project where his determination and enthusiasm have made a huge difference.

We hope the town captures their eagerness by asking both Mr. Norris and Mr. Patterson to serve on an appointed committee soon. New blood should always be welcome.

Lawrence is new president of Sandy Beach Association

Robin Lawrence, DDS of Cohasset has been selected president of Sandy Beach Association by the board of trustees of the association. He will succeed Paul Corbett, president since 1990, who recently moved to Scituate. Corbett will remain on the board assuming other responsibilities.

Lawrence has been a member of the board for more than 20 years and has served in several positions, most recently as coordinator of personnel. He is also an elected member of the Cohasset Board of Health.

Other members of the Sandy Beach Association Board of Trustees include James Contis, Richard Henderson, Patricia Murphy, Annette Sawchuk and Jeff Steele. Sandy Beach Association was established in 1917 by several community spirited citizens who purchased the land and established a not-for-profit organization to administer the beach facility for future generations. Beach operations are supported through contributions from the generous residents of Cohasset.

CHS water leak

CHAIRMAN MERLE BROWN, BOARD OF SELECTMEN

The purpose of this letter is to report on the water main break that occurred at Cohasset High School on Jan.24 and what was done to fix the break. The repair took 48 hours to complete in freezing high wind chill conditions, and school was closed for two days because of the break.

Although this water main also connects the Bear Hill Water Tank to the distribution system, there was no loss of pressure or flow to the town as a whole, there was no other impact to the town for fire fighting or availability for household, commercial or town uses. The shutdown of this line did not cause any abnormal reversal of flow.

We apologize for any inconvenience which this break may have caused. We appreciate the support of the school department and interested individuals, as well as the work of water department personnel and our supporting repair contractors to resolve the situation expeditiously.

Here is what happened:

MONDAY, JAN. 24

At approximately 3:30 p.m. on Monday, Jan. 24, a water main break at the high school was reported to the water department. School was not in session that day at the high school, for reasons unrelated to the water main break.

Water department personnel immediately went to the scene, determined that the leak was in the water main between the storage tank on Bear Hill and Pond Street.

Department personnel then isolated the leak by closing the gates both at the storage tank and on the Pond Street water main, which resulted in water being shut off only at the high school. These actions were discussed with school department and fire department personnel at the site.

Isolating the school in this way minimized the impact to the rest of the town. More than adequate capacity was maintained throughout the remainder of the system for fire-fighting and general usage requirements. This was accomplished because water flow from the Bear Hill tank to the town continued uninterrupted through the recently cleaned and lined eight inch water main from the tank to Pleasant Street and then through the also recently cleaned and lined 12-inch water main on Pleasant Street. Water was also supplied uninterrupted to the town from the Water Treatment Plant on King Street.

Water department and high school personnel then began searching for the drawings showing the location of the broken water main. Also, the water department notified a repair contractor to be ready to make the repairs ASAP, and high school personnel cancelled school for Tuesday, the following day.

Celebrating Earth Day

Thirty years ago on April 22, 1970, we celebrated the first Earth Day — a day dedicated to nationwide campus teach-ins to raise public awareness of environmental issues. The idea of an annual Earth Day caught on and over the past three decades one of the most effective aspects of Earth Day celebrations has been the participation of thousands of people who do more on Earth Day than just talk about their concerns. Earth Day celebrants have picked up litter on beaches, in parks and on city streets; collected and sorted items for recycling and composting; planted trees and attended Earth Fairs; as well as written letters to state and federal officials urging that more stringent antipollution laws be passed and requesting that national and local representatives be diligent about serious environmental threats such as global warming, industrial pollution and threats to endangered species.

This year Earth Day falls on a Saturday amid two of the holiest of religious celebrations of Christianity and Judaism — Passover and Easter. It is interesting to note that centuries ago when humankind lived in closer harmony with and was more dependent on Earth and its seasons for survival, entities in nature — rivers, trees and animals — were believed to possess spiritual powers. The same powers modern humans now give over to a supreme deity. However, as people built shelters so that their comfort was not dependent on the seasons, when food was purchased in supermarkets and not hunted or harvested directly off the land, and when elaborate transportation and communication systems took people almost anywhere and put them in contact with almost anyone on the Earth independent of Earth's rivers, oceans and pathways, humankind seemed to lose their connection to the beauty and richness of Earth and their dependence on her good health.

No one person better or more wisely articulated both a love of and dependence on Earth for earlier peoples than Chief Seattle of the Dwamish tribe of Native Americans. Like many of the native peoples settled throughout this continent, Chief Seattle held Earth and its creatures in sacred trust. He knew not only that the earth did not belong to humans, but that humankind was a mere strand in the web of that life rather than the weaver. What we do to that web, said the chief, we do to ourselves. When Chief Seattle was asked to sell native lands to white settlers, he responded with these prophetic words:

"How can you buy or sell the sky? We do not own the freshness of the air or the sparkle of the water. How then can you buy them from us? Every part of the Earth is sacred to my people, holy in their memory and experience. We know that the white man does not understand our ways. He is a stranger who comes in the night and takes from the land whatever he needs. The Earth is not his friend but his enemy, and when he has conquered it, he moves on. He kidnaps the Earth for his children. His appetite will devour the Earth and leave behind a desert. If all the beasts were gone, we would die from a great loneliness of the spirit, for whatever happens to the beast happens also to us. All things are connected. Whatever befalls the Earth, befalls the children of the earth."

Chief Seattle knew that as species were hunted into extinction, as rivers, lakes and streams were dammed or clogged with pollution, and as forests and wildernesses were developed and paved over, there would be little left of the sacredness and majesty of Earth to leave for our children [and his] to inherit.

Our concerns about our home — this Earth — should not be limited to a one-day acknowledgement, but should be an ongoing concern of us all every day of the year. Cohasset took a positive step toward improving the health of our little piece of Earth at the recent Town Meeting when its citizens agreed to curtail waste by paying directly for what we throw away. We agreed to compost, recycle and conserve like those former Yankee New Englanders who "used it up, wore it out, made it do or did without." This Earth Day and every day we need to remind ourselves that Earth is our only home and that we, too, hold the Earth and all her creatures in sacred trust for our children and our children's children. No one of us alone can save the Earth, but each of us working together can make Earth a better, healthier place on which to live.

Life with no TV

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Next week is the one we've been waiting for, especially since Elian Gonzalez became a soap opera fixture on the 6 o'clock news.

It's the sixth annual TV-Turnoff Week, the seven days in which we are encouraged to rid our living rooms of Barney, Oprah and R-rated movies on Cinemax.

It is sponsored, among others, by the American Medical Association, the Girl Scouts and the YMCA, loosely allied under the banner of something called "TV-Free America."

I can't say it's a bad idea.

After all, haven't the people who keep track of such things told us that by the age of 18 the average American child has watched 200,000 acts of violence and 16,000 murders of the tube?

And doesn't the average American of all ages watch three hours and 46 minutes viewing of TV every day so that by age 65 he or she will have spent nine years in front of the tube.

And doesn't the average American of all ages watch three hours and 46 minutes viewing of TV every day so that by age 65 he or she will have spent nine years in front of the tube.

And I am told that because of the boob tube, parents spend an average of only 38.5 minutes of "meaningful conversation" with their kids in a week.

Around our house in pre-television America, "meaningful conversation" went like this:

"Do the dishes."

"But . . ."

Whack!

I can envision the following colloquy taking place in more than one American homes next Monday morning:

DAD - Well, today's the day. No more television for a week.

INFANT - Waaaa!

DAD - What's the matter with her?

MOM - She wants to watch the Teletubbies. She's a bear all day if she doesn't see them.

DAD - Well, she can't.

INFANT - Waaaa!

DAD - Well, just for a little while.

BOY - What am I going to do when I get home from school?

DAD - Read a book. Cut the lawn. Clean your room. Do what you want. Just don't watch TV.

BOY - But I'll miss Sesame Street!

DAD - That's right.

MOM - The last time he missed Sesame Street he went out to play baseball and he broke Mrs. Conley's window and caught poison ivy.

DAD - Well, maybe just this once.

MOM - Honey, Martha Graham is going to teach us to make macramé this morning.

DAD - Okay. But turn the set off right after.

MOM - And Rosie is going to have Monica Lewinsky to give us the real scoop on what Bill Clinton did to her in the Oval Office.

DAD - Okay.

MOM - What are you doing?

DAD - I'm turning on the TV.

MOM - But . . .

DAD - I have to have a weather report before I go to work, don't I?

MOM - Yes.

DAD - And I'll have to turn on the news tonight to see how the Red Sox did today, won't I?

MOM - If you say so, dear.

DAD - And the latest chapter of "The Sopranos" is on HBO tonight. I don't want to miss that.

MOM - And I'd hate to miss even one installment of "All My Children."

BOY - And "Nightmare on Elm Street" is on the Movie Channel!

DAD - Aw, the devil with it.

LIBRARY CORNER

Calling all story lovers! !

The final date in a series of Sunday afternoon programs for children ages 3-6 years and their parents ends on Sunday, April 30. The live performance, sponsored by a grant from the Community Partnership for Children, features local Scituate artist Beth Green.

Green, known as the Music Lady, is a professional musician and children's music educator. She teaches musical-enrichment classes for children, ages 0-6 years, throughout the year at the First Trinitarian Congregational Church in Scituate. The class helps parents to construct a musical foundation with their children to "promote years of further musical education and enjoyment."

This last chance to participate in a fun and free library program begins at 3:30 p.m. and is open to children 3-6 and their families. Registration is not required. Come in and enjoy a wonderful story teller and musician.

Young adult video program

Public libraries on the South Shore are planning an innovative program for young adults this summer. All teens, ages 12-19, are invited to create a short video (no more than 20 minutes long). The Paul Pratt Memorial Library will hold a contest and announce a grand prize winner who will receive an "Oscar" at an awards ceremony Aug. 25 at the Duxbury Free Library.

For more information, please call Suzanne Terry at 383-1348.

One of the most important family decisions

LOCAL VIEW

ANNE SEXTON

As the director and owner of a childcare center, I was deeply troubled by the recent allegations of child abuse in a daycare center in Hudson, Mass. There are hundreds of daycare centers within Massachusetts that conform to the minimum standards that are required by the Massachusetts licensing agency, Office for Child Care Services.

A large percentage of these centers exceed the standards and provide high quality care for infants through kindergarten. These centers are staffed with well-trained teachers who are dedicated professionals. It is a rare instance that a center makes headlines because of abuse accusations like the most recent incident in Hudson.

Choosing child care is one of the most important decisions a family can make. When the child is in the pre-verbal stage of development, choosing a center requires absolute trust in the teaching staff and the center director, as well as a clear understanding of a few simple state-mandated requirements.

How do parents know the right place to send their child?

The following are some of the documents that should be on display:

A Massachusetts license to operate the facility as a childcare center.

Current building inspection certificate.

Emergency telephone numbers

Evacuation procedures

When choosing a childcare center, it is important to remember that children in the pre-verbal stage (non-talkers) cannot come home and tell you how their day was. It is suggested that parents:

1. Visit a lot of different centers. Spend time talking to the director. Get to know the person responsible for setting the center's philosophy and goals.

2. Ask for parent references (both those of currently enrolled children and previously enrolled). If there is not an available list, you may want to continue looking at other centers.

3. Determine how the director interacts with the teaching staff. Observe teachers comfort level when she/he is in the room. Notice if they behave differently when she/he is not present.

4. Ascertain the center's policy for parental visits. The center should be open to parents under almost all conditions.

5. Observe the staff in their classroom setting. Do they appear to like what they do?

6. Determine the relationship between the center director and ownership. Is the owner also the director? Is the owner actively involved in running the center?

The above list contains information mostly about teachers and directors. These are the people responsible for providing a safe and nurturing environment for children placed in their care.

Anne Sexton is the director and owner of SandCastles Childcare Center in Cohasset.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Locating drawings in such cases if often not easy. The water department tries to maintain a set of as built drawings for water mains, however we are often at the mercy of contractors to provide such plans when a development is completed. In this case, the broken water main had been moved during the construction of the new track and field facilities at the High School and the as-built plans were not provided to the water department.

An all-out search was conducted to locate a copy of the plans. The school department searched their records and contacted the project coordinator and the contractor for the new track and field facilities to see if they had the plans, to no avail. Town hall was contacted, along with the former superintendent of the water department at the time the work was conducted, with no success. Personnel were at the water department as well as standing by at their homes until late that night trying to resolve the situation.

The water department then reviewed the situation with their repair contractor, who was told to be at the site first thing in the morning to see what could be done to locate and repair the break.

TUESDAY, JAN. 25

At 8:30 a.m. Tuesday, Jan. 25, the water department's repair contractor started digging to locate the break, in spite of the problems created by extreme cold conditions, wind chill, rainy weather and lack of information on the location of the pipe. No meeting was required with water department personnel at that time since the situation had already been discussed the previous evening.

As is typical of situations without the needed drawings, the contractor began digging where the water was coming out of the ground. Unfortunately, the water main was not at the site of the visible water, and more digging was needed to chase the water from the leak to attempt to find the pipe.

The trench kept collapsing because of the flow of water from the leak and the rainy conditions that day, causing a potentially dangerous condition for excavating. However the search continued throughout the day, with support from water and school department personnel and the school project coordinator for the track and field construction. Water department personnel were constantly checking on the progress of the work and were in contact with the high school principal.

By mid-afternoon Tuesday, when neither the pipe nor the leak had been located, the school department cancelled school at the high school for the next day.

The search for the pipe continued, however, until 8:30 p.m. Tuesday evening, when the contractor reported to the water department that he has finally located the water main but not the leak. He also reported that he was close to finding the leak but that his men were exhausted due to the difficulties encountered. The water department then decided that the effort should be called off for the evening, since they felt confident that the leak could be found and fixed the next day.

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 26

Wednesday morning at 8:30 a.m., the leak was found by the contractor. Immediately the water department called a meeting with the repair contractor and School personnel to review the situation and agree on a plan.

The school personnel agreed to the water department recommendation that in addition to the repair, a new gate be installed so that in the event of a similar break in the future, the leak could be better isolated to allow the school to be supplied through Pond Street.

At this point, the required equipment and supplies not on site were acquired and the repair of the water main and installation of the new gate was completed expeditiously.

THE POST-MORTEM REVIEW

With the situation resolved, the water department conducted a post-mortem review of the event to minimize such occurrences in the future and to improve our overall system performance. In this case, we found that:

The break occurred at a coupling installed by the contractor who moved the water main for the new track and field project. The type of coupling used, where a coupling was installed on a tapered section of pipe, was completely unacceptable by the water department due to its high risk of failure. Over time, this coupling slipped off the tapered end which caused the leak. In all probability, this situation could have been completely avoided if the plans for the movement of the water main had been supplied to the water department for their review prior to the installation, since the water department would not have allowed this particular type of coupling. The water department is once again recommending to all town departments that all proposed water lines be submitted to the water department for review prior to installation.

The repair process could have been drastically shortened if the as-built plans had been submitted to the water department after the completion of the track and field facilities. The water department will in the future condition approval of any changes to the water system not only to the prior review and approval by the water department prior to installation but also the requirement that as built plans be submitted before water is turned on.

Computerized GIS mapping of the water distribution system would aid record keeping and improve the location and repair of water leaks. The water department has recently initiated a program to place existing water main plans and the location of connections into a GIS data base, but this program will take many years.

The water department has further determined that an additional gate should be installed on the Pond Street side of the connection to the high school, so that if another leak occurred anywhere on this pipe it could be isolated and the high school could continue with its water service uninterrupted.

Again, the water commission apologizes for any inconveniences experienced during the break and its subsequent repair. We are working to bring Cohasset's 19th and 20th century water system up to the challenges of the 21st century. We appreciate and need the support of the board of selectmen and the citizens of Cohasset. The water department has made substantial progress in the last five years, but still has a long way to go.

While our water system rehabilitation efforts first started with the distribution system improvements, which were critical, and water storage capacity, we have also extended our rehabilitation efforts to the water treatment plant and the protection of the sources of water supply. To follow up on the long-range distribution system plan, we are in the process of developing comprehensive long-range plans for the entire water system which will encompass distribution, storage, treatment, and watershed protection.

Legislative inaction threatens land act committee in December and it has been there ever since. It's unconscionable.

"We had hoped to have the bill ready for the April town meeting season. The best thing local communities can do now is to pass a resolution at town meeting supporting the CPA and urging their legislators to take action before the end of the current session," Molay added.

The CPA has been extremely popular with local communities struggling to preserve open space. But many people think the state has already passed the CPA. The confusion is a result, in part, of state representatives and senators trumpeting their chamber's passage of two different versions of the CPA. The bill has to win approval from the conference committee. But the members of the conference committee could alter the bill or even let it expire through legislative inaction. If the conference committee approves the bill, it still needs the signature of Governor Paul Cellucci for final passage.

The Senate version contains a proposal that would allow local communities to fund the CPA through a real estate tax surcharge of up to three percent of the existing property tax paid by homeowners. It also includes an option for a transfer tax of not more than one percent of the value of a property that is being sold. The first $100,000 of property value would be exempt from the transfer tax. The transfer tax would be assessed at the time the homeowner sells the property.

The House version contains the same real estate tax surcharge as the Senate proposal. It also contains a state reimbursement proposal missing from the Senate version. Communities that adopt the surcharge would be eligible for 25 percent in matching funds from the state. The transfer tax was removed from the House version because of opposition by realtors' associations, Molay said. According to Molay, realtors' associations oppose any tax that increases the cost of purchasing a house. Some realtors fear that another tax could threaten some home sales.

"What the realtors' associations don't mention is that the 6 or 7 percent commission earned by realtors haven't slowed home sales," Molay said.

She also pointed out that home prices have risen dramatically in the past few years without slowing home sales.

Both the Senate and House versions would require approval for local adoption of the CPA by town meeting and the state Legislature. Molay said the House's 25 percent reimbursement is too low, and should be increased to 50 percent. She said the Community Preservation Coalition strongly supports the inclusion of a transfer tax in any version of the CPA.

The Norfolk County Commissioners have their own proposal for a CPA. The Commissioners want the Legislature to divert an existing stamp tax from the state General Fund to local communities. The stamp tax is paid whenever a house is sold and the new deed is recorded at a county Registry of Deeds. In 1999, Cohasset homeowners paid approximately $200,000 in stamp taxes. The Norfolk County plan would divert that money to local coffers for open space purchases, historic preservation and recreation uses. Legislators on Beacon Hill have not been receptive to the Norfolk County plan because it would remove more than $50 million from the General Fund.

Fighting crime against local seniors which have proven successful in other areas include a computer calling system, a house numbering program, a 911 emergency light, File for Life, and home safety inspections.

"The computer calling system basically just checks on frail seniors to see if they're OK," Cahill said. "If the senior doesn't respond, the police get dispatched immediately. The emergency light will blink rapidly if a senior flicks a switch inside the house signifying trouble.

"The house numbering program allows the house number to be displayed clearly, so emergency personnel can easily find the house. The File for Life is a magnetic container which goes on the fridge and has all of a senior's medical information inside. This way paramedics know exactly what medications a senior is on and what their health problems are."

Cahill said items such as smoke detectors are checked during a home safety inspection and replaced if need be.

> — Norfolk County Sheriff Michael Bellotti

Police Chief Brian Noonan said he welcomes any new initiatives of the TRIAD program which could improve safety for the town's senior citizens.

"The program is new to us, and we're just starting to get a lot of information on it, but I welcome anything that will assist seniors," Noonan said.

Bellotti said the success of the TRIAD program in other parts of the country ensures that it should work well in Cohasset and other Norfolk County towns.

"We don't have to reinvent the wheel," Bellotti said. "In speaking with sheriffs in other parts of the country, it's clear these programs work. All we had to do is put the resources in place, which we've done."

With an active, service-based Council on Elder Affairs already in place in Cohasset, Bellotti said major initiatives will likely not have to be put into place.

"Cohasset has so much going for it already in terms of its seniors," Bellotti said. "Let's all talk about what programs are in place, and try to fill in the few gaps that might exist."

While Conley was becoming concerned about possible septic contamination, insurance adjuster James Leonard hired an engineering firm in November to investigate the cause of the flooding. The report from the Burke Corporation in January stated that the direction of water flow had been changed as a result of the blasting, a fact which Coughlin acknowledges.

"An old, buried pipe was interrupted which seems to have been providing drainage to her foundation," Coughlin said, while noting that there is no record of a contractor hitting anything.

Despite the acknowledgement that the water flow on her property had been altered as a result of the sewer work, Conley said she was not taken seriously when complaining about possible septic contamination.

"I kept saying 'What about this odor?'" she said. "At one point, it seemed like everyone was blaming each other. The town and the contractors were keeping their distance and no one was taking me seriously."

Conley decided to take matters into her own hands after Alissa, an asthmatic, became ill in January.

"I took her to the ambulatory unit at South Shore Hospital on Jan. 9," she said. "She was having flu-type symptoms, intestinal pain, and respiratory problems. The doctor said the problem wasn't the flu, but was constricted breathing."

After failing to get anyone to heed her concerns about possible septic contamination, Conley decided to act.

"I called Tutela, the town, Albanese, the insurance adjuster, and no one would listen to me," she said. "Finally, I picked up the Yellow Pages in a rage and decided I'd get the water tested myself."

At her own expense, Conley called Envirotest Laboratories of Westwood, who took water samples in her basement the first week of February. Later in February, both Conley and Alissa became violently ill after spending a number of hours in the basement during the weekend.

"Alissa had been down there watching TV, and I was doing a project on the computer," said Conley, who works as a computer graphic designer at Boston College. "We both were throwing up, just feeling awful. We had gone out to eat that day with my other daughter Megan, who goes to Regis College in Weston. I called Megan, and she said she was fine. That's when I knew it wasn't food poisoning that was making us sick."

Just as she began to feel better three days later, Conley received a call from Michael McCaffrey of Envirotest confirming her worst suspicions.

"He said the water did have fecal matter in it, and said it was safest to leave the premises," Conley said.

She and Alissa left home the last week of February, Alissa going to stay with friends in Cohasset and Conley going to her parents' house in Needham and later Kimball's-By-The-Sea Motor Inn.

The house was condemned by Health Agent Joseph Godzik on March 1 after a second test of water seeping into Conley's basement revealed higher levels of fecal coliform than did the first test.

"The levels of fecal coliform indicated sewage was getting into the house," Godzik said. "Sewage brings the potential for gastrointestinal illnesses as well as Hepatitis A. We had to get them out of there."

Godzik immediately requested that Conley's home be hooked up to the town sewer. Conley and Alissa were able to finally move back in to their home on March 30, but Conley said the stress put on her and her family over the last year has been overwhelming.

"I've maxed out my credit cards to stay at Kimball's and to pay for us to eat out for five weeks," she said. "I've spent thousands in dry cleaning to try to save the clothes that were down there. I've been paying a mortgage for half a house and gotten sick. I just thank God I don't have three little ones. I don't think we could have survived if the kids were younger."

Conley has also had to throw away many of Matt's most prized possessions because of contamination, as well as a bed, books, CD player, television, and a leather couch. Her portfolio from college, a treasured momento, was also ruined.

"We had to throw away anything porous, because the contaminated water might have seeped in," she said.

Insurance payments will likely reimburse Conley for the financial losses suffered due to the flooding and contamination in her home, but she said the emotional stress has been difficult to deal with as well.

"I've had to come home every night and decide what I have to do for the sewer project," she said, thumbing through voluminous files she has meticulously kept about the damages to her home, which include more than 600 pictures taken to document the damage. "I've made calls at night, made calls at work, and basically lived in total chaos. I took two weeks of vacation to work on this. If I don't call people, no one calls me."

Conley said other homeowners can learn a lesson from her experience this past year.

"If you have conviction about something, you have to act," she said. "You can't depend on other people. If I hadn't gotten that water tested, it may never have been done. I was convinced there was a health issue, and I'm glad I acted upon it. I kind of feel like Erin Brockovich, except I didn't climb in any sewers."

Still, Conley's trials with the sewer project are far from over. Her basement is completely gutted, and pictures of basketball stars on her son's former bedroom wall is the only sign he once lived there. The walls still need to be sprayed with antiseptic before the process of rebuilding her basement can begin. An exploratory trench has also been dug in her yard for the purpose of installing a new drainage system.

She is at least secure in the knowledge that the house will be safe for her and Alissa, and for Matt and Megan when they return home from college.

"It makes me furious when I think Matt was sleeping in the basement for much of the summer," she said. "My motivation in this whole thing was for the health of my family."

Plaza buoyed by new arrivals others, from Jonathan Livingston Square in January.

Owners Mark and Daniel LaVita are second-generation tile installers and are confident their new location will help expand their business.

"The accessibility and visibility of our new Cohasset store is outstanding, and the traffic flow at Tedeschi's Plaza is really helpful to our business," Mark LaVita said. "We look forward to providing quality workmanship to Cohasset area residents for many years."

While the LaVitas somewhat knew what to expect when opening their new location, Par-Tee Indoor Miniature Golf owner Maryann Crawford is nervous about beginning her first business venture.

A Quincy native, Crawford is parlaying her love of golf into creating the first indoor miniature golf course in the area, which is set to open May 5.

"I've really enjoyed golf the past six or seven years, and the idea just kind of struck me one night," she said. "I thought an indoor miniature golf course would be great because you can make it a year-round thing."

Crawford said the miniature golf at Par-Tee will be a bit more challenging that those courses found at arcades.

"It's going to be more elaborate than what you'd normally find indoors," she said. "We've got top-of-the-line, pre-fabricated holes which will simulate real golf."

Par-Tee will cater to parents wishing to hold birthday parties for children, but Crawford said she hopes to serve a broader-based clientele as well.

"I want it to be for everyone," she said. "I'd like it to be somewhere that kids go, that families go, that teenagers go on dates, and even the elderly. I don't want it to be only for one group or the other."

Crawford said a simple snack bar will provide chips, candy, and sodas, while pizza will be supplied by Victoria's, also located at Tedeschi Plaza.

While Par-Tee will open for business on May 5, Crawford said a grand opening celebration has been set for May 19, which will include a raffle for a starter set of junior golf clubs.

Par-Tee will likely benefit from great word of mouth among Cohasset's younger set, as Crawford's brother David and his five children under the age of 12 live in Cohasset.

"I've already got my own little advertising committee," Crawford joked.

Crawford said she looked for a site in Quincy, but found nothing suitable for her business. She said she will make Cohasset's seafaring heritage a part of the fun at Par-Tee.

"The manufacturer of the holes is making a lighthouse as one of the obstacles," she said. "Also, a bunch of kids from the high school are going to paint an underwater scene on one of the walls. It will have a fun, nautical theme."

new discharge pipe will not harm lobsters stored in the harbor.

"We've always been aware of the concern," Vanderweil said. "This was all discussed in public meetings when the system was being designed, as far back as the 1980s. But the fresh water that comes in every day from the Gulf watershed is much greater than what the sewer plant will bring in."

Dan Coughlin, the town's contracted engineer for the sewer project, said the state Department of Environmental Protection is concerned about safeguarding the lobsters in the harbor and has determined the impact on them will be minimal.

"Something new is always worrisome, but we were required to do extensive testing in the harbor," Coughlin said. "The DEP is concerned about not only the lobsters, but also about flounder, scallops, and shellfish in the harbor. If anything, the new sewer plant will be a benefit to them. This project will minimize water quality concerns to local fish as well as lobsters."

Coughlin said the plant will improve water quality because the water will be treated before entering the harbor. He said the duck-billed diffusers at the end of the sewer discharge pipe will minimize the amount of fresh water entering the harbor at any one time.

"The diffusers allow quick dilution of the water into the harbor," Coughlin said. "The mixing of the salt water and fresh water is instantaneous. There won't be huge pools of fresh water entering the harbor."

While the DEP was convinced of the lack of danger to stored lobsters and permitted the sewer project, 86-year-old Herb Jason, a lifetime lobsterman, is concerned nonetheless.

Lobsterman "Little John" rows in Cohasset Harbor on Sunday.

"We don't need any more fresh water in the harbor," Jason said. "It's not going to be healthy for the lobsters."

Stone said it is even more important for Cohasset lobstermen to have safe storage facilities in the harbor because of the imminent departure of the Cohasset Lobster Pound in June.

The Lobster Pound buys lobsters from upwards of 20 Cohasset lobstermen each week, and ships them all over the world. Owner Tommy Alioto is planning to move this summer because the property on which his business sits has been sold.

Alioto said he doubts he will be able to relocate in Cohasset and is looking at possibly moving to Hull. He added that the move of the Lobster Pound will make life more difficult for the town's lobstermen.

"Usually, they start around 4 or 5 in the morning, and they swing by and drop their lobsters off late in the afternoon," said Alioto, who pays the lobstermen once a week based upon the weight of the lobsters each brings in. "Once I leave, they're going to have to run all over the place, which may add another three hours to their day."

Because Cohasset lobstermen will no longer simply be able to drop off their daily catch at the Lobster Pound, Stone said storage will become more of an issue.

"We're going to have to store our lobsters for a few days to transport them to Boston, Scituate, or Plymouth," Stone said. "But once the pipe starts operating, we may have to sell every day because of the danger to our lobsters."

Alioto said he believes Cohasset lobstermen will have to sell their catch each day because of the risk to the lobsters from the sewer pipe.

"If that sewage pipe wasn't coming in, I don't think they [Cohasset lobstermen] would be obligated to come to me or someone else every day," Alioto said.

Coughlin said the testing done in the harbor has satisfied the DEP that stored lobsters will not be harmed by any fresh water coming in from the sewer pipe. He said the tidal flushing which occurs twice daily brings in far more fresh water to the harbor than will the sewer discharge pipe.

"The effects of the sewer plant in the harbor are really miniscule compared to the tidal flushing," Coughlin said.

Cohasset's Travis Moore tries to get around a Norwell defender during the Skippers 3-1 victory.

Boys lax splits with Norwell, Falmouth

The Cohasset High boys lacrosse team survived its toughest week to date, splitting home contests with Pilgrim Conference rivals Norwell and Falmouth.

Led by senior attackman Travis Moore's two goals and goalie Kevin DeVito's 14 saves, the Skippers squeaked by arch-rival Norwell, 3-1 for their third straight victory. Sophomore attackman Peter Kovach had Cohasset's third goal in a game in which the Skippers never trailed, but got no breathing room until Moore's second goal late in the fourth quarter.

"We overcame poor shot selection to beat a much-improved Norwell team," said coach Paul Sporn. "We had possession of the ball for two-thirds of the game, but still would have been in trouble had it not been for the defensive play of DeVito, seniors Brad Powell and Bill Good, junior Geoff McWilliams and freshman Nick Spirito."

The defensive effort wasn't enough last Thursday against Falmouth, last year's Eastern Massachusetts Div. 1 semifinalist, and one of the top six teams in the state.

The Clippers, jumping to a 5-0 first-half lead, handed the Skippers their first loss of the season, 8-3.

Cohasset's goal scorers were Travis Moore, sophomore attackman Jason Moore, and junior midfielder Ronan Buick. Kevin DeVito withstood the on-slaught and made 12 saves, and sophomore back-up netminder Kyle Weber came off the bench to register two saves.

"Falmouth's goalie was outstanding," said coach Sporn, "but, overall, it was a somewhat disappointing team effort on our part. Ronan Buick, however, had a solid game at midfield."

The Skippers were scheduled to play two non-league foes during the vacation week. On Tuesday, they were to travel north to Topsfield to face Masconomet Regional. And on Thursday they were to host Walpole at Alumni Field.

Skippers look to regroup after break

Unable to generate sustained offense, the Cohasset High girls varsity lacrosse team dropped two South League contests last week, falling to Hingham and Sandwich.

Against Hingham, consistently ranked among the top three teams in the state in recent years, the Lady Skippers were able to manage only three shots on goal, and fell 14-1.

Senior co-captain Jackie Kahn had Cohasset's lone goal, while freshman goalie Gia Petrakis had 14 saves in the loss. Kahn and sophomore defensive wing Carlie Carter led the team in ground balls by picking up five apiece.

The Lady Skippers fared better in their second match-up before spring break, scoring six times against host Sandwich, in a 14-6 loss.

Senior Carolyn Cameron and sophomore Kristen Sheerin led the offense with a goal and an assist, and two goals, respectively. Kahn, co-captain Jenny Chastain and freshman attacker Sera Genovese rounded out the scoring.

Kahn had five shots to lead in that category, while Chastain and sophomore Emma Gardner grabbed 10 and seven ground balls apiece. Petrakis had 20 saves in a solid effort in goal.

"I was a bit disappointed with our overall team effort against Sandwich," said coach Cathy Gaudiano. "Our long bus ride didn't help, and we had a few good individual efforts, but we'll need to step it up in the second half of the season, if we want to make the tournament."

Cohasset, now 2-3, next travels to Barnstable on Tuesday, April 25, then hosts Duxbury on Thursday, April 27.

Frostbiters take the plunge for Habitat for Humanity

By Alison Cohen
CORRESPONDENT

The winter wind blows cold off the ocean. According to Channel 56 weather guy, and Frostbiter, Mike Wankum, the water temperature dips into the nippy 30s. The nasty elements keep most of the lobstermen in by the fireside, but doesn't deter an intrepid bunch of local sailors.

Meet the Scituate Frostbiters. These folks are out in the harbor racing their sailboats every Sunday from late fall to early spring.

The Frostbiters begin their "inside the harbor" races as soon as the harbor empties out of boats. That usually happens around Halloween, according to Frostbiter Bev Bruce of Scituate.

"In summer there's no room in the harbor," Bruce explains.

Although season's races are held in Scituate, the opening event always takes place in Duxbury. Fleet members start out from the Bluefish River and sail out to and around Bug Light.

"That's a fun race," says Bruce.

The serious racing begins the following week.

"We race every Sunday from November through April, unless a holiday falls on the Sunday.

Two of the Frostbiters set sail on Scituate Harbor.

Scituate's Frostbiters are part of a national organization that divides itself into local fleets. The Scituate Frostbiters fleet draws members from Scituate, Norwell, Marshfield, Cohasset, Duxbury, Plymouth, Hull and Hanover.

"There are even a few inlanders," Bruce says, referring to sailors from as far afield as Canton and Sharon.

At the end of the season, a national regatta of all the Frostbiter fleets is held. The location rotates among member fleets who blanket the coastline from Annapolis, Md. to Winthrop, Mass. The regatta draws an average of 60 boats.

Scituate's weekly races take place entirely within the harbor, making it easy – and colorful – for would-be spectators. The members sail out and around buoys, competing for the lowest score possible. They run five to six races, lasting from 1 p.m. to 3 or 3:30 p.m.

The Scituate Frostbiters are an independent group, which is somewhat unique. While most fleets are sponsored by a yacht club, Scituate's Frostbiters opted to stick with the public boat launch near Pier 44 in order to keep the cost of participating to a minimum. The downside is that it leaves members changing into their foul weather gear in the nippy environs of the public parking lot. They rely on Pier 44 for the post-race warm up and conviviality session.

Members range in age from high school through senior adults.

"It's a really strong intergenerational group," said Bruce.

Smaller fry can get into the act, too. From Halloween to Thanksgiving, the Frostbiters run races for an Optimist class. That class is restricted to sailors under 14 with a smaller boat. Their season is cut short because the adults think it may be too cold out on the water for them.

The average number of boats participating in an ordinary weekend race is anywhere from eight to 14.

"We always go out," says Bruce. Well, make that almost always.

Bruce concedes that the races can be canceled from time to time. That happens only "if the winds is blowing more than 20-25 knots or there is enough snow in the parking lot so that we can't get the boats down the ramp." "We have been known to shovel off the ramp. And we go out when it's snowing."

A total lack of wind will also cause the race to be canceled.

"We actually got iced out one week this winter," Wankum adds.

Weather conditions predict turnout. Not surprisingly, more sailors will show up if the weather is sunny and mild than if it's raw and snowing.

How cold does it get out there?

"A lot of people ask that question because they think we are totally crazy," Bruce admits. She tells them, "It's really no worse than skiing."

In fact, says Bruce, who does both, skiing can be harder. First, because skiers sit motionless on the chair lift, getting frozen. Sailors are less likely to feel the cold because they are constantly in motion.

Wankum agrees. As a trained meteorologist, he knows from cold weather safety. As an addicted winter sailor, he knows thrills. He calls this a safe thrill.

"With all the gear and all the motion, you actually sweat more," he says.

Like skiers, winter sailors have special gear, called a dry suit, to insulate them from the cold and protect them if the boat flips over. These suits are specialized foul weather gear featuring elastic closings around the neck and wrists and attached booties. It's not a foolproof way of keeping warm out on the winter water.

"Your hands and feet certainly can get cold."

It may shock the uninitiated to know the boats Frostbiters sail in winter have a tendency to flip over from time to time, catapulting the captain and crew into the icy drink. That's when those snug elastic closings and attached booties on their dry suits become critically important.

Racers also wear life jackets to keep their heads above those chilly waters and keep them afloat.

Even if the water can't get in, you still don't want to stay in the water for long. To prevent that from happening, the Frostbiters have two boats out there, "affectionately called crash boats," whose job is to tend – or keep close watch — on the racers and their boats.

The life jackets they wear also have whistles attached for an added measure of safety.

"If you do flip, which sometimes happens, water can't get in," Bruce explains. "The water is really cold."

That may be an understatement, according to Wankum.

"I flipped over – oh I don't remember when – January, I suppose," he said. "When you actually hit the weather – or when you finally get your breath back – you never have any fear. You know you're not going to die because there are all the crash boats about and people helping you. It's just that cold slap in the face; an Aqua Velvet moment, you might say."

The crash boats are equipped with pumps. If a boat flips, the racers right the boat as quickly as possible and the nearest crash boat pumps it out.

"Then you hop right back in and keep going," Bruce says. "It's something to laugh about later."

Because the Frostbiter races are held entirely within the harbor area, it makes it easy for landlubbers to watch the event. The best spots to watch from are the parking lot at the intersection of Hatherly and Jericho roads or out by the lighthouse.

What keeps people sailing when the weather takes a turn for the cold and raw?

"It's a great group of people," says Bruce. "It's very competitive when we're out there on the water. We go out on even the coldest days, then head to Pier 44 to warm up. The social piece is as much a part of it as the sailing."

Winter racing definitely has its attractions.

Bruce is a confirmed Frostbiter and has been for 14 years.

"I actually met my husband at the Interclub nationals," says Bruce. "As a matter of fact, I met him out at the end of the dock. We've been racing together for nine years."

The Scituate Frostbiters have many husband-wife teams. Joe and Linda Berkley are another, now from Hull, they originally sailed with the Larchmont, N. Y. fleet.

"Joe, my husband, and I met sailing," Linda Berkley said. "He called me up out of the blue. I only went with him because he owned this really cool, famous boat."

The Berkleys still have that boat as well as the one they currently sail during the winter months.

"Our important boat is called Rumdum," Berkley said. "It's over 50 years old, it's a mahogany boat that was owned by two famous sailors."

The Berkleys don't race Rumdum in the winter not because of her seaworthiness, but because the Scituate fleet keeps its boats at one end of the public parking lot, unlike the Larchmont fleet which had indoor storage facilities.

"That boat is so historic that we're afraid to leave Rumdum out in the harsh New England weather," Berkley explains. "The boat we race is called Luge."

Because the Frostbiters races tend to be less serious than the summer races, more young people serve as crewmembers. Not only does the experience get kids hooked on sailing and racing; it also promotes intergenerational friendships. There are lots of adult-child teams racing each week.

What makes these people go down to the frigid sea in ships?

"It's fun, it's different, it's challenging," says Berkley.

Wankum, who didn't learn to sail until he was in his 30s, not only loves the thrill, he enjoys the people he races with and against.

"It's a very eclectic group," he says. "Where else are you going to find teachers, photographers and TV weather people gathered in one room?"

Scituate's Frostbiters want to do more than satisfy that thrill of matching themselves against the elements and each other and create a pretty sight in the harbor. They turned a recent regatta into a charitable occasion. The regatta benefited South Shore Habitat for Humanity Scituate Ad Hoc Committee. Proceeds from the race were donated to South Shore Habitat for Humanity's Scituate committee.

"It was a beautiful day," said Bruce. "We had about 17 boats out there."

The race had been postponed from March 12 on account of foul weather, which cut back the number of sailors able to participate. Even so, the Frostbiters raised $200 on registration fees alone. Members of the Ad hoc committee, who hope to get a Habitat house built in Scituate for a qualifying low income family, raised another $150 by serving refreshments to watchers and selling Habitat merchandise.

The cause brought a lot of Frostbiters out specifically for the occasion, both from Scituate and from other fleets.

"I think very highly about Habitat," says Berkley. "I wish they could have charged more for the regatta."

How did the Habitat regatta get started?

Bruce is part of a church group at St. Luke's Two other members of the church group are active members of the Scituate Habitat group. They mentioned the need to find interesting ways to raise money to get the house built. Bruce suggested a regatta would be one way. The Habitat folks jumped at the opportunity.

As it turned out, both groups benefited.

The Habitat group donated trophies, handcrafted by Habitat member Jim Flanagan, for the top three finishers. They also sold refreshments and Habitat merchandise to spectators. The Frostbiters got a bigger crowd watching their race.

Both groups got some publicity and "visibility" out of the event and enjoyed each other's company.

"We had a potluck afterward," said Bruce.

The racers also enjoyed an intangible benefit from the collaborative effort.

"For me, personally, I felt that even if we can't actually bang in nails, we could help buy a few of the boards," said Bruce. "This particular event was really special for us. We got a lot of exposure in a good cause."

If you'd like to see the Frostbiters and their boats race before the wind, time is running out. The Frostbiters will only be sailing for the next two Sundays.

"The mooring balls will be going back in the water real soon," said Bruce. "There will be no room for us to race."

Panache is feather in CEF Spelling Bee cap

By Mary Sheppard
FOR THE COHASSET EDUCATION FOUNDATION

The dictionary meaning of panache is a bunch of feathers or plume on a helmet, such as those worn by French soldiers during the Napoleon era. Still, another meaning of panache is dash or verve.

To the Cohasset Education Foundation, Panache — the Paris apartment rental company owned by Connie and Nadar Afshar of South Main Street — is the opportunity to offer seven nights' stay in a Parisian apartment rather than the past prize of three nights' stay in a hotel, to the winners of the Sixth Annual CEF European Trip Raffle held this year during the Foundation's Spelling Bee Tuesday, May 9, in the Cohasset High School cafeteria at 7:30 p.m.

Nadar Afshar, a CEF board member, says the winning ticket holders will be able to select the apartment that is suited to their individual needs of size, charm, style and location. The winners this year will experience the flavor of one of Paris' neighborhoods and enjoy the City of Lights from one of 20 arrondisement (district) locations including The Left Bank (Rive Gauche), The Marais, The Latin Quarter and Montmartre.

Raffle ticket prices remain at $25 each.

The appeal in renting European apartments over staying in hotels has become a popular trend with those who like to travel.

"There are several amenities," said Connie Afshar, who worked with a small European apartment rental firm in Boston before starting up Panache last year. "Value for dollar in more living space is probably the biggest. But, you also have a more flexible lifestyle than in a hotel and, because you're actually living in a neighborhood, you tend to feel more like citizens of the city, rather than visitors or tourists."

The Afshars have been Cohasset residents for the past 16 years and raised their four daughters in the Cohasset public school system. Well-seasoned travelers before meeting at a school in Switzerland years ago, their oldest daughter, Jemilah, was born in France.

"Nadar and I love to travel. Love exotic places. But, when the children started coming, it was time to hang up our traveling shoes for awhile," laughed Connie.

She added that one of the great aspects of her work is traveling to Europe on a regular basis to investigate newly available apartments.

"Finding all the nooks and crannies, the great food at reasonable prices, and the places where the Parisians go is what I do when I go over. Helping our clients experience Paris at cost is rewarding," she said.

Most Panache clients rent apartments for one to two weeks, according to Nadar, although, they can rent up to one year. There is a five-night minimum, and most apartments are located in Central Paris.

"We have apartments that range from cozy studios to large, luxury three-bedroom residences," he added. "We encourage people who are interested in renting to give us as much lead time as possible in finding them an apartment that suits their needs at any time of year, in season or off. A lot of the people who contact us have exchanged houses and time shared residences. But, once they're clients of Panache, they like that we handle everything for them, and they keep coming back."

"Nadar and I love our work," Connie said. "We want our clients to have a wonderful time in one of our favorite cities, and our standard at Panache is to offer a very high level of personal service to make that wonderful time happen."

For CEF raffle ticket information and purchase, call Nadar Afshar at 383-6006, Midge Stone at 383-2281, Lynn Durkin at 383-2732, or any CEF board member.

The new Red Lion Inn opens to raves

Restaurant and bar ready for customers

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Town officials and invited guests got their first glimpse of the renovated Red Lion Inn at a pre-opening gala Monday night, and the response was a combination of amazement and admiration at the job done by the staff and construction workers to finish the building by owner Gerd Ordelheide's mid-April deadline.

"I was here just last week, and I never would have believed they could get it done this fast," said Tom Gruber, who was one of many Monday night to visit the new Lion's Den bar before sitting down to dinner at the Inn's restaurant, Les Roches.

Ordelheide said he was bound and determined to meet the mid-April deadline for the opening of the bar and restaurant. Both were open to the public yesterday.

"I gave them a deadline, and I really started to crack the whip these last couple of weeks," Ordelheide joked.

A number of wooden posts, one of which is inscribed with the original inn's opening date of 1704, contribute to the warm, informal atmosphere in the Lion's Den. Guests could be seen with a drink in one hand, leaning comfortably against one of the posts and engaging in conversation with other invitees.

Guests at Monday night's pre-opening got a first look at the elegant but warm surroundings in Les Roches. The chefs, led by executive chef Brendan Noble, are visible to guests in the open kitchen as they prepare the food. Round wooden tables and paneled floors contributed to the intimate feel of the restaurant and gave it an old-world quality.

"I painstakingly wanted to make sure it didn't look or feel like a new place," Ordelheide said. "I wanted the restaurant to be easygoing with an elegant atmosphere. People can walk around the tables, not just sit stiff. I want people to be talking and having a good time. I like a little bit of noise."

"I painstakingly wanted to make sure it didn't look or feel like a new place."
— Red Lion Inn owner Gerd Ordelheide

Though only a limited portion of the full Les Roches menu was served Monday night, none of the guests were complaining.

Each guest was able to order an appetizer, such as steamed mussels or a fresh green salad with crumbled feta cheese, a soup, such as lobster bisque or lentil with bacon, and a main course, such as an oven-roasted beef tenderloin, a duet of grey sole and cod, and a grilled free-range chicken.

Those who were able to leave room for dessert sampled items like apple strudel and a flour-less brownie. Reviews of the food at Les Roches were unanimously positive.

"Everything was wonderful," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "The whole night was great."

While the restaurant and bar are finished and serving customers, the rooms of the inn still need some finishing touches. Ordelheide said the upstairs rooms of the inn are to be finished in time for the first reservations on May 4.

"The carpentry work is done in the rooms and we just have some painting left to do," he said. "The first rooms are booked and we're already booked for the month of July as well."

Cohasset postal workers to collect for food pantry

Cohasset Post Office workers will again be working for the Cohasset Food Pantry Saturday, May 13, when residents are asked to leave food and household supplies by their mailboxes to be picked up by mail carriers for eventual delivery to the Pantry.

"This is a wonderful public service by the postal workers," Marjorie Steele, head of the Food Pantry operation, said. "It stocks our shelves for the summer and makes sure we're able to meet the needs of a number of Cohasset families for non-perishable food and household items. We hope townspeople will respond generously again to this effort as they have done in the past."

Last year the postal-workers collected more than 4,200 pounds of foods and staples. This year's drive has been organized again by Richard Leach with the encouragement and support of Postmaster Stephen Cabezas.

"This is a wonderful public service by the postal workers."

— Marjorie Steele, head of the Food Pantry operation.

A "wish list" drawn up by Steele and her associate Bob Thompson, to guide residents in their donations, includes coffee, sugar, canned vegetables and fruit, ketchup, mayonnaise, cold cereal and fruit juices, as well as laundry and dishwashing detergents and paper products. Only taboos are outdated, dented, rusted or otherwise unappealing items.

The carriers pick up the donations as they deliver the mail, then bring it to the Post Office where they are weighed. Other volunteers sort the items and help bring them to the Pantry in the basement of the Second Congregational Church on Highland Avenue beside the Town Hall, where they are shelved and stored.

The Pantry is open from 9-10 a.m. Tuesdays. Any Cohasset resident who meets limited income guidelines or who has special needs is eligible to receive food at two-week intervals.

MORNING TEA

May breakfast

It's spring — it must be May Breakfast! This delightful tradition continues for the 101st year at Old Ship Church Parish House, 107 Main St., Saturday, May 6, from 7:30 to 10:30 a.m. Everyone is welcome to enjoy one of the South Shore's best breakfasts and the opportunity to acquire a wide variety of plants at excellent prices. There will also be some attractive door prizes. For more information, call the church office at 749-1679 or Linda Hewitt at 826-5050.

In the early days, the breakfast commemorated May Day, a celebration rooted in ancient rites of spring connected with fertility rites. Today, May Breakfast draws a crowd of gardeners and people who like to eat — of all ages — from Greater Boston and the South Shore. Pancakes and eggs, homemade muffins and coffeecake, and beverages highlight the menu. The plant sale includes a wide array of annuals, perennials, fruits and shrubs.

Sponsored by the First Parish, Hingham ("Old Ship"), May Breakfast is a popular and festive spring gathering for local communities, which also raises funds for Old Ship's work, including an extensive religious education program, and a variety of charitable initiatives. Old Ship's historic 1681 meeting house is the oldest church building in continuous use in North America and is a national historic landmark.

In the scripture lessons for Easter Sunday, Peter realizes that the gospel of new life is for all people. The second lesson directs those who have shared in the experience of Christ's resurrection to set their minds on the things that are above. In the gospel reading three women disciples first learn of Jesus' resurrection. Preacher: The Rev. E. Clifford Cutler.

Mitzvah day at Hingham temple

Congregation Sha'aray Shalom, 1112 Main St., Hingham, invites you to celebrate its fourth annual Social Action Day, Sunday, May 7, beginning with bagels, pastry and drinks at 8:30 a.m. and concluding with a community-wide barbecue from 12:30 to 2 p.m.

The event is more familiarly known as Mitzvah Day, because commandments that require us to give our time, money, efforts and talents to benefit our fellow man are fulfilled. Helping others is among the most fundamental of all Jewish virtues. By being involved in the varied activities available that day, everyone gets an opportunity to express Judaism's most profound belief that actions are greater than words.

If your inclination is to physical activity, you can sign up for the Walk for Hunger. Walkers will meet in the Temple parking lot, travel to Boston by bus, walk for about 2.2 miles, and be back in time for the barbecue at 12:30 p.m. If you want to stay closer to home, you can go for a one-mile walk at Wompatuck State Park, where All Paws Rescue has organized a "walk for homeless animals." Folks will also have a chance to do a clean up at area Scituate beaches. Those who want to can help create a blooming garden right at the Temple, or walk over to the Mary Martha Learning Center and help the folks there spruce up for spring. Families can decorate bird feeders to benefit South Shore Habitat for Humanity. Adults can sign up to give blood to the Red Cross. Those who want to can help make meals for Father Bill's Place in Quincy, or visit several senior citizens' homes to help them with house repairs, or create wonderful get-well cards for area hospitalized children.

All activities originate at Congregation Sha'aray Shalom, 1112 Main St., Hingham, at 8:30 a.m. For more information or for directions, call 749-8103.

Garden club blooms at Museum of Fine Arts event

Local arrangers interpret Whistler's work of art

By Liz Lawrence
CORRESPONDENT

Spring is here, and the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston is the best place to see flowers and art arranged together in the annual Art in Bloom 2000 exhibit.

Scituate Garden Club members are busy getting their hands dirty in anticipation of the event.

Virginia Heffernan and Ginger King of Cohasset will be representing the club for this year's Art in Bloom exhibit by interpreting with flowers artist James McNeill Whistler's "Harmony in Flesh color and Red." Art in Bloom takes place at the MFA April 25-27.

"Whistler, was very interested in Japanese block prints. There is something about his painting with a Japanese effect. The cherry blossoms and the cherry tree part of the painting is quite simple."
— Scituate Garden Club member Virginia Heffernan

"Everybody is assigned a work of art, and must design a floral work to complement the piece," said Heffernan, the lead arranger for the project.

Although the club will work side by side with 72 other garden clubs, each interpreting their own piece, this is not a competition according to King.

"Art in Bloom is non-judged, there are no ribbons. People can enter and be creative without worrying how people will see their arrangements," said King.

Blue ribbons or not, the women are working hard.

" We've been actively thinking about it since March 2," said King. She also mentioned the many hours spent trying to find the right container, and proper colors for their piece, all while learning as much as possible about the American artist himself. Heffernan said she also got a closer look into the artist's mind by studying his work.

"Whistler, was very interested in Japanese block prints. There is something about his painting with a Japanese effect. The cherry blossoms and the cherry tree part of the painting are quite simple," said Heffernan. Both women were amazed when they learned that Whistler only used three colors for the whole painting.

This is the just the effect Polly Pyne, garden club coordinator for Art in Bloom 2000 wants all of the arrangers to feel.

"I hope everyone learns something from it. I hope the arrangers study the object and learn so much about it, that they love the object." The same goes for those who view the exhibits and arrangements, Pyne said. "It exposes the observer to the creativity of those trying to get into the artist's mind," she said.

This is the 24th year of Art in Bloom, according to Pyne. Scituate's garden club has been interpreting art through flowers for 15 of the 24 years, Heffernan noted.

While the annual Art in Bloom show is a wonderful way to herald spring, it's just one project the busy Scituate Garden Club undertakes throughout the year. Each month the club's 60 members — that include some from Cohasset — meet to plot new ways to beautify the community.

The Scituate Garden Club is responsible for the development of well-known wildflower garden behind the historic Mann House on Greenfield Lane. The colorful garden has become a draw, bringing many visitors to the site.

"Fifteen years ago we started creating the garden, since then a lot of people come to walk and visit the garden, said Heffernan.

" People may think we sit around drinking tea," added King while laughing, " I spent all day swinging a pick-ax at The Mann House." King said the group also enjoys maintaining the post office window boxes, and teaching about gardening in education programs at different schools and nursing homes.

Art in Bloom officially opens to the public on April 24 with a gala benefit. Daily Art in Bloom events include guided tours of the arrangements, informal flower arranging demonstrations, illustrated lectures, luncheons with fashion shows, a garden cart shop, and afternoon tea with music. Some events are ticketed and some are open to the public. For information and reservations call (617) 369-3395 or log onto "http://www.mfa.org" or www.mfa.org.

Heffernan and King urge the community to come down and support the Scituate garden club's interpretation, and reminds everyone that the club's plant sale is set for June 3 at the wildflower garden at the Mann House.

Police made 15 arrests last month

March was a fairly busy month for the Cohasset Police Department, Police Chief Brian Noonan said. There were 16 arrests: one for breaking and entering, one for carrying a dangerous weapon, one for possession of drugs, two for operating under the influence of alcohol, one for motor vehicle violations, four for outstanding warrants, five for minors transporting alcohol and one for protective custody.

During March the police department investigated four motor vehicle accidents, none of which resulted in personal injury. There were 112 motor vehicle citations issued totaling $3,580 in fines. Additionally there were 46 parking tickets issued for $1,510 in fines, he said.

"During March our Emergency Dispatch Center received a total of 574 calls for police services, of those 87 were Emergency 911 calls," Noonan said.

Funds raised to date for refurbishing the department's four-wheel drive Blazer have exceeded $3,000, thanks to generous donations. This figure is still shy $2,500 needed to refurbish the Blazer.

Police made 15 arrests last month

March was a fairly busy month for the Cohasset Police Department, Police Chief Brian Noonan said. There were 16 arrests: one for breaking and entering, one for carrying a dangerous weapon, one for possession of drugs, two for operating under the influence of alcohol, one for motor vehicle violations, four for outstanding warrants, five for minors transporting alcohol and one for protective custody.

During March the police department investigated four motor vehicle accidents, none of which resulted in personal injury. There were 112 motor vehicle citations issued totaling $3,580 in fines. Additionally there were 46 parking tickets issued for $1,510 in fines, he said.

"During March our Emergency Dispatch Center received a total of 574 calls for police services, of those 87 were Emergency 911 calls," Noonan said.

Funds raised to date for refurbishing the department's four-wheel drive Blazer have exceeded $3,000, thanks to generous donations. This figure is still shy $2,500 needed to refurbish the Blazer.

The Designing Woman by Kathleen Fox ASID

ISLAND DREAMS AND REALITIES

All too many homeowners make the mistake of putting too large an island in too small a kitchen. To get the right fit, kitchen designers recommend designing the perimeter cabinets and countertops first, then marking out the adequate walkways. (The minimum walkway space between an island and any countertop should be at least 36 or 42 inches.) The space that is left is the maximum size of the work island that can be suitable for a kitchen. The island can fill either the entire remaining space of the kitchen, or only part of it. For the best results in terms of function, an island should be at least 26 inches wide and 3 feet long.

The kitchen design professional at The Designing Woman emphasizes individualized attention, works with customers to craft design plans that result in kitchens that maximize functional space and add value to homes. We coordinate the selection of materials and craftsmen to ensure each phase of the project meets your expectations. From design to installation and follow-up, you can be assured of quality results. Call 383-6411 to learn more about our services or to arrange a convenient consultation.

HINT: A kitchen island need not necessarily be rectangular, or even symmetrical. Angle one end or put a circular end for eating.

Norwell native Susan Tedeschi may not have taken home a Grammy this year, but she won three of the four Boston Music Award categories for which she was nominated.

Local musicians shine at Boston Music Awards

Susan Tedeschi takes three categories

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

All the usual diversity of the Boston music scene was represented — rock, ska, reggae, rap/hiphop, swing/lounge, jazz, folk/acoustic, blues, country, world music and more. But mainly, it was the thrash-heavy alterna-rock forces who stole the spotlight at last week's 13th annual Kahlua Boston Music Awards (KBMA) held at the Orpheum Theatre.

Most evident of the new recognition for the loud, fast and hard in the local area was the showing by high-decibel North Shore quarter Godsmack, who led all nominees with four award wins, including the prestigious Act of the Year plus Outstanding Rock Band (Major Label) and Outstanding Male Vocalist and Song/Songwriter (Major Labels) for front man Sully Erna and the hard-rocking alt-radio hit "Keep Away." Other multiple winners from the high-volume field were Sheila Devine and Powerman 5K.

But a couple of other genres enjoyed multiple honors as well. Norwell's own Susan Tedeschi won Single of the Year (Indie Label) for the soulful, high-energy tune "Rock Me Right," plus Outstanding Female Vocalist (Indie Label) and Outstanding Blues Act, plus Dorchester-born 70s disco diva Donna Summer accepted one of two Hall of Fame awards handed out for the occasion and Outstanding Female Vocalist (Major Label).

The KBMA ceremony was not without its controversial or less celebratory side concerns. Attendees heading for the Orpheum entrance down the long driveway area were encountered by a large and vociferous picket protest of employees from Cambridge's Rounder Records, accusing the company of union-busting. Several award winners, such as three-timers Sheila Devine, offered their thanks and condolences to area DJ, publicist and longtime scene supporter Mikey Dee, who was recently debilitated by a severe stroke.

The awards show drew its usual near-sellout house, despite cross-town competition this year from the rescheduled Fleet Center appearance of pop superstar Mariah Carey, who canceled her date from earlier this month due to hospitalization from food poisoning. Besides the coming of age of Boston's alt-rock legions (it was probably due as we enter the new millenium), the gala was characterized by a greater presence of South Shore-based nominees than in any previous year.

Tedeschi's three trophies came from a total of four

Bruce Katz has the blues

Marshfield musician thrilled by BMA nomination

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

He is a renown musical marvel and part-time music teacher at Berklee, but most of all, he is one cool cat.

He is Bruce Katz, of Marshfield, and his band was just nominated for best blues act at the Boston Music Awards held Thursday at the Orpheum Theater.

Although Norwell native Susan Tedeschi took home top honors in the blues category, Katz said it was an honor just to be nominated. Katz and the band are also up for best soul and rhythm and blues act at the Boston Phoenix Awards coming up in May.

To understand the Bruce Katz Band's sound take his advice.

"Imagine what the blues would sound like if the Mississippi River flowed through New York City."

Katz said his band "plays original blues that that is both traditional and adventurous, one that incorporates New Orleans rhythm and blues, gospel influenced roots music, boogie woogie, and the deep soul of blues into a startling, fresh musical gumbo."

"Part of it is that I write and play tunes that have a lot of adventure to them. The rhythmic part of our music is deep, and intellectually progressive, and the groove is heavy enough to dance to. It's music for your head and feet."

Blues artist and Marshfield resident Bruce Katz

The Bruce Katz Band features Katz on the piano and the Hammond B-3 organ, Julien Kasper on guitar, Ralph Rosen on drums, and Blake Newman on string bass.

The band has three albums out, and they are currently working on a fourth which will probably be titled "Three Feet Off the Ground," Katz said.

While Katz is enjoying the success he and his band have had so far, he said getting to where he is took a lot of hard work.

Katz loves his instruments, whether it be the piano or the Hammond B-3 organ.

"I used to play a lot more piano than organ," Katz said, "now it's a lot more organ than piano." Some of his musical influences include people like Ray Charles, Thelonius Monk, Professor Longhair, James Brooker, and blues pianist Otis Spann.

"There's lots of people I like," Katz said. "I've always tried to play different styles like rock, jazz, blues, and New Orleans style music."

And there are a lot of people Katz has joined with on albums.

"There are 30-35 records that I've been on," said Katz.

Katz's career started at a very young age, and from day one, people around him knew he was going to be good.

"I was about 5 years old, and my older sister was taking piano lessons," Katz recalled. As his sister was learning songs from her teacher, Katz listened in. And when nobody was using the piano, Katz would wander over to it and play what he had listened to — by ear.

"My sister soon quit piano," Katz said jokingly.

From that point on, Katz practiced classical piano until the time he was 16 years old. The music he listened to while growing up included the likes of Bessie Smith and other jazz and blues veterans.

"I started teaching myself blues," Katz said, "and while I didn't really know what I was doing, I had a lot of tech-

Movies about World War II are making a comeback

By Ed Symkus
CNC SENIOR ARTS WRITER

One question burns constantly in the minds the folks who run Hollywood, coming up at every closed-door studio meeting: What does the public want? What kind of film will they shell out their hard-earned bucks for?

These days it seems that romantic comedies, science fiction, horror and, inexplicably, Adam Sandler films are the big winners. But two other genres once were bankable: westerns and war movies. And while westerns seem to have ridden off in the sunset, war films — specifically those that refer to World War II — still get made, albeit rarely.

Over the past couple of years, "Saving Private Ryan" raked in more than $200 million just in the U.S., and although it didn't make a lot of money, "The Thin Red Line" earned rave reviews. Now, as production begins on the planned epic of "Pearl Harbor," an item from a genre within the WWII film genre is about to be released in theaters. "U-571" takes viewers beneath the waves for some scuffles between Americans and Germans, between submarines and U-boats. It's been almost 20 years since the subject was tackled in the claustrophobic classic, "Das Boot," and it's been more than 40 years since submarine movies like "Up Periscope," "Run Silent Run Deep" and "The Enemy Below" were popular films of the day.

Why might WWII films attract a viewership today? The director, a technical adviser and a couple of actors featured in "U-571" have some suggestions.

Matthew McConaughey, who stars as Lt. Tyler, admits that he's not exactly sure what the specific attraction of war films is.

"I suppose they were always successful when we were having wars," he says. "Now maybe there's more of an interest because our generation is so removed from them. I'm lucky enough to never have lived with that fear of thinking, 'Hey man, I might have to go to war and

Simplifying Leg of Lamb

Leg of lamb is not America's favorite holiday roast. Many folks object to its assertive flavor and many cooks roast the leg bone-in, which makes for both tricky carving and meat that is unevenly cooked. My goal was to take a fresh look at lamb, seeing if I could resurrect its public image, making it both simpler to prepare and better in flavor.

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

The first issue was the type of lamb. You can buy lamb from New Zealand, Australia, Iceland, or the United States. (The country of origin is indicated on the outside of the package.) A tasting performed in the test kitchen at Cook's Illustrated found that the strongest lamb came from Australia followed by New Zealand, America, and then Iceland, the latter having such a delicate flavor that it was jokingly referred to by tasters as "lamb lite." Although many factors impact flavor, the age of the animal is the most important. The Australian lamb was clearly the oldest of the lot and the Icelandic product clearly came from a very young animal. (The leg was much smaller.) Since American lamb is the most common supermarket offering, you will most likely be serving a relatively mild roast lamb, but if you want almost no lamb flavor whatsoever, go for the Icelandic.

The next question was what portion of the leg is best. A whole leg of lamb will run 8 to 10 pounds, which is too much meat for most dinners and also takes a long time to cook. So I decided to use only a half leg. You have a choice: you can use either the sirloin half (the upper half) or the shank half (the lower half). I tested the recipe using both and found the sirloin half to have two benefits. First, the meat is more tender. Second, the sirloin half is more even in thickness (the shank narrows considerably towards the end), which makes for more even cooking and easier tying. (Be advised, however, that the sirloin end is harder to find than the shank.)

The next question was boning. Bone-in legs are almost impossible to carve so I went with a boneless leg. Having boned many legs before, I knew that this is beyond the patience level and skill of most home cooks, so just ask your butcher to do it for you. I would ask them to remove as much fat as possible from the leg since the fat contains much of the strong flavor which some of us find objectionable. I also tried boneless legs sold in the vacuum-sealed bags and I wasn't crazy about them – they seemed less than fresh and rather slimy to the touch. (For a half leg, the bone weighs about a pound, so order a 4 1/2 pound leg bone-in if you want 3 1/2 pounds boneless, the amount called for in the following recipe.) Finally, ask your butcher to butterfly the leg so that it is of an even thickness.

The next issue was seasonings since a leg roasted with only salt and pepper lacked flavor. Using a base of olive oil, salt, pepper, and some chopped garlic, I experimented with thyme, rosemary, parsley, sage, mint, and oregano. Oregano and sage were overpowering. Mint was tasty but develops a bitter taste if cooked too much, which easily happens at the exposed ends of the roast. Thyme and rosemary were winners for their complementary flavors and parsley added a fresh taste. I also tried toasted pine nuts, Parmesan cheese, and anchovies, but was not crazy about any of them with the herbs. Next, I tried Indian spices but they were a bit overpowering so I settled on thyme, parsley, rosemary, and garlic as my flavoring agents.

The herb mixture is spread on the inside of the roast and then the meat is rolled back into shape and tied with twine. Butchers use a variety of slipknots but you can use any knot you like. Just make sure to tie one loop around the ends of the roast lengthwise to keep things in shape as it cooks. I tried browning the roast on top of the stove before roasting but I found no major benefits. I then tested oven temperatures and settled on 375 degrees; lamb cannot be roasted in a low oven since it turns mushy, and higher heat simply overcooks the exterior before the interior is ready. If you need to serve a crowd, I would opt for two half legs, which will cook faster than a whole leg.

ROAST BONELESS LEG OF LAMB WITH HERB STUFFING

Preparing the leg before roasting is important. Ask the butcher to bone the half-leg (sirloin end preferred), trim off as much fat as possible, and butterfly the meat so that it is of an even thickness. When you get the roast home, untie it, and make sure that he or she has done their job, trimming fat if necessary. If the roast is not of an even thickness, place it between sheets of waxed paper and, using the bottom of a heavy saucepan or a meat pounder, whack the thicker parts until they thin out. You will also need 2 yards of twine for this recipe and an instant-read thermometer is quite helpful.

1 3 1/2 to 4 pound boneless half leg of lamb, sirloin half preferred
3 tablespoons best quality olive oil
Salt and freshly ground black pepper
1 medium clove garlic, finely minced
2 tablespoons fresh parsley leaves, minced
1 tablespoon fresh rosemary, minced
1 tablespoon fresh thyme, minced

1. Heat the oven to 375 degrees and adjust a rack to the lower middle position. Have ready a roasting rack placed inside a roasting pan.

2 Unroll the lamb and lay it on a cutting board with the outside or fatty side facing up. Trim off any thick surface fat. Flip the roast so the rough or interior side is facing up. If the meat is not of an even thickness, "butterfly" the thickest part by cutting most of the way through this part horizontally and then opening it up like a flap. (Or, cover with waxed paper and pound it with a heavy saucepan.) Rub the exposed surface with 1 1/2 tablespoons of the olive oil. Season liberally with salt and pepper and the chopped garlic and herbs. Roll (start with a long side) the roast onto itself to re-assemble the leg. Starting at the thick end, tie the roast with the twine at 1 inch intervals. Tie one loop around the ends along the length of the roast. Rub the outside with the remaining 1 1/2 tablespoons olive oil and season liberally with salt and pepper.

3. Place the roast on the rack and into the heated oven. Cook for 45 to 60 minutes or until an instant-read thermometer inserted into the thickest part reads 135 degrees for a medium-rare roast. (For medium, roast to 140 to 145 degrees.) Let rest for 10 minutes on a cutting board, tented with foil. Slice and serve.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

Most people are already familiar with astrological sun signs — those presumed indicators of personality and future. There are, however, much more telling influences, as anyone who has studied astrology knows.

I try to do something a little different with my astrological forecasts. I like to compare astrology with meteorology. Just as meteorologists predict the physical weather — if there will be sun or precipitation — an astrologer can forecast the mental and emotional weather ahead.

A meteorologist tells you whether to bring an umbrella or sunglasses to work. By charting the course of the heavens and the various effects of celestial spheres on the human condition, I can tell you what type of day we are likely to have and how people are likely to react. My goal is to help you be prepared for the week ahead.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 19

The sun enters Taurus at 2:40 p.m., remaining there until May 20. The moon travels in serious Scorpio all day. A 90-degree alignment of Mars and Uranus takes center stage, however. Don't take chances or do anything risky. Travel with care. Avoid potentially volatile situations or people. Give others lots of freedom and space. Prayer and meditation can help you to gain deep, penetrating insights and find new meanings.

THURSDAY, APRIL 20

Stormy astrological weather continues until 6:36 a.m., when the Scorpio moon opposes combative Mars and becomes inactive. Wake up in a good mood. Roll up your sleeves and take on a big work project. A harmonious alignment of Mercury and Pluto aids jobs that require repair or problem-solving. You can get to the heart of a matter and work out the glitches that have been holding back progress. Keep an open mind. Plan a quiet evening.

FRIDAY, APRIL 21

At 12:58 a.m. the moon enters Sagittarius, generating an upbeat mood today and tomorrow. The green light remains on for new starts across the board. If you plan to get a lot accomplished, however, you must have a clear plan of action and stick to it. People will be sociable, talkative and easily distracted from practical matters. Let fun and games top your agenda this evening.

SATURDAY, APRIL 22

The combination of a Sagittarius moon and applying Venus/Uranus alignment makes this a day for socializing partying. Be more adventurous and spontaneous. You can initiate new activities before 5:25 p.m., when the moon aligns with Uranus and becomes inactive.

SUNDAY, APRIL 23

An optimistic Sagittarius moon continues inactive travel this morning. Take extra time out for yourself; enjoy a relaxed, leisurely breakfast. Influences turn around completely at 12:47 p.m., when the moon enters realistic Capricorn. Focus on promises you have made to others and follow through. New starts in your business or personal life are recommended. This is also a favorable time for making important decisions and commitments.

MONDAY, APRIL 24

Planetary action tops the chart for new beginnings of all kinds. Pull out all the stops. Now is the time for launching ventures, signings contracts, making major decisions and changes, particularly regarding career or business. It is best to start new activities before 6:43 p.m., when the Capricorn moon aligns with expansive Jupiter. An applying alignment of Mercury and Uranus prompts you to keep an open mind on all issues. Follow your hunches; your instincts are on target.

TUESDAY, APRIL 25

The moon continues to travel in pragmatic Capricorn all day. At 2:12 p.m. it aligns with Mars and becomes inactive. However, an applying alignment of the sun and Neptune warns against launching important ventures or signing contracts today. You may not have all the facts. Instead, this is a day to finish old business, clean and reorganize, handle routine chores and errands. You can be most productive.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 26

A 90-degree alignment of the sun and Neptune takes center stage today. Allow extra time to get where you are going. People may not be feeling particularly energetic or ambitious; they can be forgetful, distracted, late for appointments. The moon enters freedom-loving Aquarius at 1:42 a.m. and aligns with Neptune at 2:52 p.m. and the sun at 3:30 p.m.

Flowering trees for the spring landscape

Part 2 — Pears and crabapples

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

As gardeners, we often yearn for an early spring, eager to witness the rebirth of our landscapes, work the soil and plant trees, shrubs, flowers and vegetables. Should our wishes be granted, however, we must accept the inevitability that there are likely to be occasional setbacks, as a few of our early bloomers rarely escape the damaging effects of late season freezes.

Green thumbs up

Brisk, chilly breezes delivered sporadic snow flurries this past week as several consecutive, frosty evenings singed the elegant blooms of the saucer magnolias, turning their satiny, rose and cream petals brown and crispy, like the withered flowers of a faded corsage. Greenhouse-grown annuals, perennials and herbs, which had not been sufficiently hardened off, may have been injured by the nippy temperatures and desiccating breezes. In our perennial borders, the soft, delicate leaves of a few prematurely emerging perennials have become limp or blackened. Most of these plants will recover, but the urge to plant frost-sensitive annuals, herbs and vegetables before mid-May is rarely worth the time and expense. Cold soil temperatures will only delay their development and all may be lost to late season freezes. Delay planting your new, tender acquisitions until they have been gradually acclimated to direct sun and move them into a shed, garage or similar protected space on evenings when frosty temperatures are predicted.

The progression of glorious spring bloom continues as more trees and shrubs burst into flower. Few trees rival the beauty of the early-blooming ornamental pears. Rapidly gaining in popularity in recent years for use as street trees in both urban and residential areas, these perfectly-formed trees produce magnificent clouds of pure white blossoms followed by deep green, glossy leaves which persist well into the fall, turning a rich, deep bronze. These handsome specimens are tolerant of drought, poor soils and pollution and seldom require pruning. Grow in full sun for optimum flowering and leaf color. Mature specimens may reach a height of 30 feet, depending on the cultivar, making them rather large for many foundation plantings, but handsome additions to the general landscape as a focal point or to line driveways or roadways. A street lined with flowering pears in full bloom is absolutely breathtaking. The 'Bradford' pear (Pyrus calleryana) is one of the more popular cultivars, but mature specimens are prone to damage during storms. More recent selections, such as P. calleryana 'Red Spire' and P. 'Aristocrat,' are less susceptible to breakage and smaller in stature. Few species of trees offer as many positive attributes and low maintenance as the ornamental pears.

The use of native trees and plants in the landscape has become increasingly popular as gardeners realize the adaptability and durability of using plants indigenous to our area. The serviceberry or shadblow (Amelanchier spp.) can be found growing in damp areas around the Northeast and makes a lovely specimen particularly suited for moist to wet soils in full sun or partial shade. Usually grown as multi-stemmed tall shrub or small tree, ranging in height from 6 to 20 feet, small, star-shaped, white flowers in spring are followed by fruits which are attractive to birds. Brilliant fall foliage provides additional seasonal interest.

Spectacular, reliable bloom makes the family of crabapple trees one of the loveliest of our spring-blooming woody plants. Innumerable varieties are currently available offering a wide range of flower color including white, pink and red, as well as a diversity of fall fruits in varying size and color. There are weeping cultivars and considerable variation in branching forms and ultimate sizes, with several new dwarf varieties ideal for smaller spaces. A few introductions provide season-long bronze or burgundy foliage. Look for cultivars which produce small fruits which tend to make less of a mess and are more appealing to wildlife. Robins, cedar waxwings, mockingbirds and finches will spend the fall and winter partaking of the attractive, shiny clusters of berries which may be red, purple, yellow or orange. Perhaps the crabapple's greatest fault is its tendency to be an extremely vigorous grower which requires yearly pruning shortly after bloom to thin crossed branches and remove suckers from around the base of the tree. Select new, disease-resistant varieties and plant in a sunny location in well-drained soils for a stunning spring display year after year.

Jon Bon Jovi loses the long locks and sports the naval look in "U-571."

Rocker-actor wants to juggle two entertainment careers

By Ed Symkus
CNC SENIOR ARTS WRITER

What happens when rock stars try to become movie stars? Usually nothing. After deciding to stretch out from fronting the greatest rock 'n' roll band in the world, Mick Jagger made "Performance" and "Ned Kelly." Bad move. Then there was John Mellencamp's ill-fated acting gig in "Falling From Grace." The less said about Prince's work in "Under the Cherry Moon" and "Graffiti Bridge," the better.

But here comes New Jersey native Jon Bon Jovi, still musically sound with 80 million albums under his band, Bon Jovi's, belt. And he's just completed his seventh theatrical film in an acting career that's stretched from a small part in "Moonlight and Valentino" up to the lead in "The Leading Man" and a feature role as Lt. Pete Emmett in the new WWII submarine action film "U-571."

But wait, the rock part of his life is still quite active. A new album is set for a late-May release and the band is set to start a world tour in July.

"I'd like to be able to keep doing both," says Bon Jovi. "And I look to another guy from Jersey who was able to tour until he was 80 and made 60 movies. Frank Sinatra to me is a guy that really had the best of both worlds."

Actually it isn't that he'd like to do both; it's more that he needs to do both.

"I really enjoy the process of songwriting," he says. "I need to express myself in those ways. But I don't need to spend 16 months on the road supporting the records any more. So even now as I'm shooting a small part in a big picture [Mimi Leder's upcoming "Pay It Forward"], I'm prepping what will be the tour for the new record, and I'll go out for 50 shows instead of 250."

Ah, but the acting bug bit pretty hard. Yet Bon Jovi insists it was an accident, that he never wanted to be an actor.

"I was asked by Emilio Estevez to write a song for 'Young Guns,'" he recalls. "And one song eventually became an album. And with the success of that album, then winning a Golden Globe and playing at the Academy Awards and being nominated, I thought [movie music] would be my outlet. I went on the set of 'Young Guns' and I said to the director, 'Use the theme of this song as your score.' But he hired another guy to do the score and I just thought, 'OK, it's your film.' But I eventually thought, 'Where do I go from here?' My agents were music agents. So I went to an acting coach and asked how it works. I started reading scripts and I eventually started to enjoy it. I went to my first audition and never even went into the room to read. I walked out, a bundle of nerves. Two years later, I read for David Anspaugh and won the role in 'Moonlight and Valentino' and now it's become a passion."

Bon Jovi refers to acting as another way to express himself in the arts and feels it's a way of starting over again with all the life experiences he's had in his band over the past 17 years.

"I can bring that to any film project," he says. "And yet it's a humbling way of being 21 again. You know, bright-eyed and bushy tailed, being the first one on the set every day and saying, 'Yeah, bring it on.' I really enjoy the process. And I have another simple theory: If it's not my bed, at least it's the same bed for months on end. I like that."

So he keeps sounding rather negative about the rock star experience, or at least about how long he's been at it. But ask him if he's even a bit excited about getting ready to hit the road again, and the answer is surprising.

"You know, the honest truth is that I'll be the one kickin' and screamin' out my driveway, but when the house lights go out on that first night, then I'll become that guy again and I'll be right back in those comfortable shoes. It's so second nature, I don't even have to say anything to the guys anymore. It's a look , it's a call, it's like being a quarterback calling the audibles. We know each other, we know the dynamic. And that's one of the great differences between acting in the movies. It's the five of us against the world. But when you show up on a set you're an independent contractor. You're one of a hundred people. When you're done with your role you don't see it for a year, you're not involved in the editing, the marketing, anything to do with it. You show up with your seven bucks like a ticket buyer at the premiere."

As far as acting in "U-571" is concerned, Bon Jovi admits that he was never attracted to action movies. He's someone who writes lyrics for a living and feels there's never enough dialogue in that type of film.

"But the original drafts of this were very rich in dialogue," he says. "And I felt that being in a submarine, it better be rich in dialogue or it was gonna be a boring picture. So there was rich dialogue, and the opportunity to act, in essence, speaking Latin. I had to learn what a dial and a gauge and port and starboard were. It was going to be the next logical step for me in acting."

He also thinks that working as part of an ensemble is like working with a safety net.

"I haven't had a picture rely on me other than the small independent ones," he says. "But it's growing to that stage and I obviously am anxiously awaiting my shot."

"U-571" opens nationally on April 21.

category nomination. Her competition in the Blues Act category included Marshfield's organist extraordinaire Bruce Katz. Hall's Dave Foley Band took the prize for Outstanding Country Act, telling the huge turnout that the win was "deeply appreciated ... but totally unexpected."

Interestingly, the Outstanding Jazz Vocalist category named both of the South Shore's resident jazz divas, Norwell's Donna Byrne and Duxbury's Rebecca Parris — a tough choice, but Parris edged out the wife Mel nominated from south of the Cape. Stoughton folksinger Tom McKenna, Hingham and Quincy club bands Supervalumey and Two Top Shoe, Quincy reggae act One People and Cohasset swing/jump/jive quintet Bellevue Cadillac, led by singer/guitarist/front man Doug Bell.

The five performance program was also dominated by those representing the ultrasonic alt-rock scene including Angry Salad, The Push Stars and Sheila Devine but once again highlighted by Godsmack, who reportedly recorded their platinum-selling major label debut album for a mere $2500 borrowed from a friend. Godsmack had the evening's only two-song spot, which included the award-winning song "Keep Away" and the hypnotic, tympani-powered follow-up single "Voodoo."

But also notable was Tedeschi's five spot, a solo electric-guitar-backed version of her melancholy blues ballad "Just Won't Burn." The locally grown blues belter/guitarist also graciously thanked for the support of her family and friends, many of them in attendance, when accepting her first award of the night for Single of the Year.

Orchestra Morphine, a tribute act for Boston rock/R&B trio Morphine — whose lead singer/bassist Mark Sandman passed away over the past year — and consisting of Sandman's bandmates plus singer Laurie Sargeant of 80s Boston band Face To Face fame, delivered an appropriately poignant jazz/artrock homage to their late friend and front man. Less impressive was Donna Summer's performance following her acceptance of the Hall of Fame award, a drum machine-supported and mostly lip-synched offering of her recent hit "Love and Forgiving."

The other Hall of Fame honor went to rappers and tech-hoppers Gang Starr. The duo followed with their own performance of a rap from their greatest hits album, a slice of street violence scene-narrative called "Full Clip."

Former J. Geils Band lead singer Peter Wolf appreciatively introduced Atlantic Records founder Ahmet Ertegun, the recipient of the special KBMA debut Ertegun Impact Award for outstanding contributions to the music industry. Ertegun, whose ties to Boston music history are minimal (he signed the Geils Band to his label back in 1970, but that's about it), is nonetheless one of the more influential longtime figures in the business, having launched the trailblazing label that has spanned a virtual history of the last fifty years of rock, blues, R&B and jazz and recorded artists from Ray Charles, Aretha Franklin and Otis Redding to The Rolling Stones, Crosby Stills Nash & Young, Led Zeppelin, AC/DC and more recently Stone Temple Pilots and Kid Rock.

Ertegun, now 77, is also the keynote speaker at this week's annual NEMO Music Showcase and Conference in Boston, which the KBMA actually serves as the kick-off event each year. The music/recording pioneer expressed his appreciation at receiving an award also named for him and complemented Boston as "the source of some of the best seafood I've ever had."

Nominated for a Boston Music Award in the Outstanding Jazz Vocalist category, Norwell resident Donna Byrne was edged out by Duxbury's Rebecca Parris. Byrne was the featured vocalist in the recent Swing into Spring Concert at the Abington Library with The Dick Johnson Big Band.

Recently nominated for a Boston Music Award, Bruce Katz and his band will play a concert date at Unitarian Universalist Church in Duxbury on April 29.

nique, so I went to college at Berklee (school of music in Boston)."

Katz said while he attended Berklee during the 1970s, he "threw" himself into jazz music. Katz graduated from Berklee, but never really left it behind. Today, he teaches at the school.

"I'm only teaching part time," Katz said, noting he needs the time to tour and record albums. "The schedule keeps everyone happy. The fact that there's no school from May until September frees up some time as well."

After Katz graduated, he experimented and played with a number of bands including Barrence Whitfield and the Savages and Jimmy Witherspoon.

A single called "Stop Twisting My Arm" by Barrence Whitfield got extensive radio play during the course of the 1980s. The song presented a good example of Katz's hard driving, thick blues piano playing.

By 1992, Katz founded the band he is currently in, and it was the same year the band released its first album.

"The band started with a lot of different people in it," Katz said, adding in the past eight years, The Bruce Katz Band has seen two drummers, two guitarists, and four bass players.

One of Katz's former band mates currently plays guitar for the chart-topping local singer/songwriter Paula Cole.

At the same time he was playing with The Bruce Katz Band, Katz began playing with a band called Ronnie Earl and the Broadcasters. But Katz said the former never broke up because of his side project.

"We never disbanded," Katz said. "But I was playing a lot with Ronnie Earl and the Broadcasters."

But by 1997, Katz was putting his focus on The Bruce Katz Band, and by that time, the band had released the"Mississippi Moan," — an album which earned the band national recognition.

"When we made that album I realized I had to stop playing with Ronnie Earl and the Broadcasters," Katz said.

Since 1997, The Bruce Katz Band has toured extensively throughout the United States and even Europe. The band played in Norway last year, and they are opening for Ray Charles at a gig in Europe this summer.

The pinnacle of success for Katz was when he found out he was nominated for this year's Boston Music Awards.

"I found out when I was reading the paper," Katz said. "I was really surprised."

Katz success also includes receiving rave reviews from publications like The Boston Tab, The Blues Review magazine, The Washington Post, The Boston Phoenix and Keyboard magazine as well.

When it comes to what makes his music unique, Katz said it best.

"Part of it is that I write and play tunes that have a lot of adventure to them. The rhythmic part of our music is deep, and intellectually progressive, and the groove is heavy enough to dance to. It's music for your head and feet," he said.

"We take a lot of time in developing our songs. They're really well thought out and constantly rehearsed."

And Katz has advice for musicians starting out in the area.

"One of the keys is to take every opportunity and just play anything and everything," he said.

"I'm proud to say that I've played everything from fusion, to rock, to blues, to country, to disco. I probably could've done without the disco."

The Bruce Katz Band will be playing on behalf of Congregation Shirat Hayam in Duxbury at the The First Parish Universalist Unitarian Church, also in Duxbury, on April 29 at 7 p.m.. For more information on the show, call (781) 582-2700. For more direct information on The Bruce Katz Band, log onto their website at www.Brucekatzband.com.

Movies about World War II are making a comeback

have hand-to-hand combat," or even the opposite extreme, because of some brand of patriotism, of wanting to say, 'That has never been a reality to me or my generation or younger. It's a history that my generation and younger, don't have to have that fear."

McConaughey is reminded that after Vietnam, although a number of Vietnam-related films were released — "Apocalypse Now," "Platoon" and "Full Metal Jacket" come to mind — there was a dearth of WWII films.

"This was the last great war where you could say, hands down, this was a good one," he offers. "We had a foe that was black and white. It was hard to argue about whether we should be there or is the bad guy really the bad guy we should be getting. It was pretty clear cut that this was a good war we were fighting. Vietnam was not that way."

The film's technical adviser, Vice Admiral Patrick Hannifin, USN (Ret.), survived an attack by depth charges in the Yellow Sea during WWII, and served on a captured German U-boat after the war. He says that "Saving Private Ryan" made a big impact on what may be a resurgence of WWII movies. But he also brings up a deeply personal thought.

"That generation — my generation — is getting a little long in the tooth now," he says wistfully. "And I think there's a lot of encouragement to try to remember, at least for us to try to pass on to our grandchildren, what things were like in those days. I think maybe the public got a little tired of the Vietnam pictures. Too many of them, and too many of them that were pretty bad. So the good World War II movie perhaps brings people back to a different era."

Jonathan Mostow, the director and co-writer of "U-571," chooses to relate a bit of history that fascinated him enough to make this movie.

"In 1942 Hitler launched what was called Operation Drumbeat against the East Coast of the United States," he explains with authority. "And unbeknownst to the American public — people still don't realize this today — a quarter of all the ships sunk in the battle of the Atlantic were sunk right off our own coast. Hitler's stated intention was to so terrorize the American public that no one would volunteer for merchant sea duty. And for much of 1942 the beaches from Maine to Florida were closed because they had oil slicks, they had bodies washing ashore. You could stand on the beach on Cape Cod or North Carolina or Florida, and you could see tankers blowing up on the horizon.

"My father was from Boston," he adds. "I remember him telling me that during the war the gold dome on the state capitol was painted black because the U-boats were using the reflected moonlight bouncing off it as a navigational beacon ... by eyesight... that's how close they were."

Mostow feels that not only is the time right for a film such as his, it's also quite important that it be seen.

"There's a U-boat we captured in 1944 in the Museum of Science in Chicago," he says. "I was there about a year and a half ago to see it, and the curator of the museum said you would be horrified today at the number of people who come through here that have no idea who we fought in World War II, what side the Germans were on, what side we were on, that there was even a battle of the Atlantic. I wasn't trying to make an historical movie here, I was making an action-adventure picture. But if it gets some people interested enough to actually start looking into this element of our history I think that's great and I'm really proud of it. Otherwise all of this stuff risks sort of slipping away into the footnotes of history."

Mostow is pretty sure there will be a resurgence of WWII films. And he thinks that part of that is due to the enthusiasm shown for John McCain.

"Here's a guy whose positions most people don't agree with," he says. "Ninety percent of the people who supported him, if they knew his positions, would not vote for the guy. Yet blindly, people threw in with him because he represents a sort of valor and bravery and sense of values that we don't seem to have in our society. I think we are craving these values that we don't have any more. In my parents' generation, I don't know anybody that wasn't in some way connected to the war. And this is the generation that built this country. What's the generation now? It's MTV, we're all flabby. The surprise people have looking at this movie is how patriotic they feel at the end. And they love feeling that way."

But of all the folks sharing thoughts and ideas on the need or popularity of WWII films, Bill Paxton, who plays the hard-nosed Lt. Commander Dahlgren, has the most direct answer.

"I think the X Generation and the Y Generation are getting into history through films like 'Private Ryan' and through the History Channel," he says. "I think it's the last war where we had a real clear-cut situation. I mean we could all easily be sitting here speaking German right now."

"U-571" opens nationally on April 21.

SOUTH SHORE REAL ESTATE

Realestate.com: Where should you look?

Real estate on line: lots of sites, lots of information and local connections

By Susan Brickman

Homes.com. Owners.com. RealEstate.com. Realtor.com. HomeRoute.com. iOwn.com. The list of Internet sites offering information about home buying, home selling, financing, home improvements, brokers, pricing, property listings, credit and more goes on and on.

If you go on line looking for anything to do with real estate, be prepared to spend a lot of time culling the site you truly need from the long slate of homes and real estate dot coms out there in cyberspace.

The sites do offer a great deal of information, but you can save a lot of time if you know a little about what you want to know.

For information about South Shore real estate, click on www.townonline.com/southshorehomes.

Some provide information about home ownership alone. Others include tips on selling on your own. Many include everything from property listings to finding an agent to applying online for a loan to the newest in appliances.

But most consumers want to know what's out there, what it costs and how they can get to it. The dot coms are still duking it out.

"There has been a parade for supremacy on the real estate listing playing field, and I'm glad I'm not playing on that field," said John M. Peckham III, director of the Real Estate Cyberspace Society (http://www.recyber.com), an organization of real estate professionals who use the Internet and networking capability to serve clients. "I'm just an independent observer of all this insanity."

The Cyberspace Society isn't affiliated with any of those dot coms. It is a networking platform for its members to communicate with each other and provide, every 60 days, updates on how to use the cyberspace technology more effectively. The site even has a cyberspace radio program, which is open to the public, providing more than 40 hours of continuous broadcasting about real estate information and techniques being used by real estate professionals.

Peckham is, perhaps, the most perfect of all witnesses to this real estate dot com boom: more than 30 years ago, he predicted today's technological advance into the industry.

In 1968, he wrote an article for what is today Realtor Magazine about a buyer in Minnesota looking for a three-bedroom house on a cul-de-sac with a swimming pool in Quincy, who puts that information into a computer on a desk and nearly instantly sees five properties fitting that criteria come up on a screen. The information is printed out, and if he decides to visit the property, an airline ticket pops out, too.

It's happening, and Peckham is a great believer in its application. Last year, Peckham sold more than $1 billion in mostly commercial real estate property using technology alone - no secretary, no assistants.

The information is out there, for real estate professionals and consumers, but it's becoming more complex in finding just the right site.

Based on the amount of information available, and the focus of the sites, Peckham has his favorites.

A former president of the Massachusetts Association of Realtors, Peckham believes Realtor.com, the site of the National Association of Realtors, the industry's trade organization, is scoring the most touchdowns on that field.

"It's way out in the lead," Peckham said, "and I don't have a bias. I just try to call the shots the way we see them."

"Everything is in transition. More and more people are using the Internet. People using the Internet can be far better prepared for the home buying and selling experience by conducting some preliminary research. That face-to-face contract with the real estate professional is never going to go away, no matter how much a virtual tour shows. The agent brings the ability to truly quarterback the transition."

Jack Peckham
Real Estate Cyberspace Society

With about 1.3 million current listings on the site - and links to the agents selling them - Realtor.com has according to Peckham, "far and away the most depth of information for the consumer.

Consumers can be exposed to about 90 percent of every property available in the United States in any given area, Peckham said. And they might even get a virtual tour of the property, sometimes with 360 degree views, sometimes with snap shots.

The site even calculates mortgage payments on the listing price, based on current, 30-year-fixed rates with 20 percent down and links visitors to Homestore.com., which provides financing information and home improvement suggestiongs.

Second in the running, Peckham said, is HomeAdvisor.com, a Microsoft product which also lists properties and agents, perhaps not as comprehensively as Realtor.com which has access to all the Realtor-owned Multiple Listing Services which list all properties being marketed by Realtor members.

Yahoo.com comes in third, Peckham said. Click on its real estate site and you will find listings, how to post your own listings, loan information, prices, marketing tips, even contractors.

The Realtor-sponsored sites don't list for sale by owner properties, so several other sites, including Homebytes.com and Owners.com are hoping to fill that niche.

Homebytes.com states it will, for a fee, list a seller's property with the Multiple Listing Service directories, post the listings on other Internet services, including Realtor.com, and provide a toll-free call center staffed by experienced, licensed real estate agents.

HomeRoutes.com says it provides consumers with access to the availability of any home in North America and will link buyers and sellers with real estate professionals.

Owners.com started out as a for sale by owner site, but recently moved to provide sellers with agents. Sellers using one of the agents are promised a rebate check after the property is sold. The site states that more than 80 percent of sellers choose to use an agent rather than sell their property by themselves.

Another real estate dot com, Homes.com is hoping to get on the band wagon by offering similar services to Realtor.com, including neighborhood information, home improvement tips, loan applications and direct links to real estate brokers.

The goal of the company, which currently does not have any affiliated brokers in the Boston area, is to train brokers to use the Internet to enhance their business and make the whole process easier for consumers, said Bob Prince, Homes.com CEO/president. Homes.com currently has 75,000 agents using its services, he said.

Prince was in Boston recently promoting the site and it's newly launched personalized site, My.Homes.com, scheduled for full release in late April. The site will allow consumers to personalize their searches by automatically linking them with the resources the consumer has determined important, including a local agent, said Darin Scott, vice president of online sales.

There are other sites out there, and more hitting the Internet daily, but if the real estate dot com business is like any other business - traditional or e-commerce - the playing field is likely to shrink, with the focus remaining localized.

"Everything is in transition," Peckham noted. "More and more people are using the Internet. People using the Internet can be far better prepared for the home buying and selling experience by conducting some preliminary research," he said.

"But that face-to-face contract with the real estate professional is never going to go away, no matter how much a virtual tour shows. The agent brings the ability to truly quarterback the transition. The use of the Internet at this stage of its development is to prepare for that face-to-face meeting with the quarterback or with someone who can find that quarterback."

It's just a matter of who is going to be head coach.

"I think there will be some consolidation," said Peckham. "I think there is room for two or three."

Free seminar to give first-time homebuyers money-saving tools

A seminar planned for later this month will help first-time homebuyers save money on their mortgage.

Representatives of the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development and Jack Conway & Co. will discuss the benefits of Federal Housing Administration (FHA) loans, which allow first-time buyers to purchase a home with a downpayment of 3 percent. FHA loans also allow the entire downpayment to be a gift.

Participants in the April 24 seminar will be eligible to receive a free financial analysis and a copy of their credit report, said Carol Bulman, president of Conway Financial Services. Potential buyers who attend the seminar and complete the credit consultation will receive a certificate that entitles them to a half-point reduction in the upfront mortgage-insurance premium on FHA loans — a savings of $750 on a loan of $150,000.

"It's a fantastic opportunity for people to learn about their financing options and see which loan programs are available to them," Bulman said. "Anyone thinking about buying a home in the Brockton area and surrounding communities is encouraged to come and have their questions answered."

The homebuyer education seminar will be held Monday, April 24, from 7 to 9 p.m. at the Massasoit Community College Conference Center (formerly Christo's II), 770 Crescent St., Brockton. The free event, sponsored by Jack Conway & Co. in partnership with HUD, is the only one of its kind in the area.

In addition to the financing discussion and an outline of the homebuying process, information on HUD-owned properties and other homes currently for sale will be provided.

Other seminars are scheduled to be held during the next two months in Dorchester and the Fall River/New Bedford area, Bulman said.

Reservations are not required, but are preferred since space is limited. Call (888) 831-1181 to reserve your seat.

Don't worry about Greenspan

BY ROBERT SEGAL
SALES MANAGER, BROCKTON CREDIT UNION

Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan has raised rates five times in an effort to slow down the economy, but looking at long term interest rates, you wouldn't know it. While the Fed is raising its rates, mortgage rates are actually coming down. And this is great news for homebuyers.

The Federal Reserve controls the Fed Funds rate, which is the rate that banks lend to each other at, usually on an overnight basis. Mainly short term rates, such as Prime, are pegged to the Fed Funds rate. Mortgage rates are largely unaffected by daily fluctuations in the Fed Funds rate, which now stands at 6.00 percent.

Instead, mortgage rates tend to move in line with longer term Treasury securities; in specific, the 10-Year Treasury note. In fact, Wall Street traders often speak of the direct relationship between mortgages the 10-Year Treasury note. The good news for homeowners is that rates for these Treasury securities are now coming down.

Long-term interest rates began dropping earlier this year due to a fundamental supply and demand situation. The economy has been so strong that the government's tax rolls are rising and its subsidies are shrinking. This has caused the budget to be in balance. Since the government needs to borrow less, it issues less debt.

This triggered a realization among investors that the supply of government bonds was actually decreasing. Fear spread that the bonds could become scarce, and investors rushed in to snap them up, driving yields down.

Then, two things happened. First, a Treasury department official implied during a testimony before Congress that bonds issued by some federal agencies are not fully guaranteed by the government. Second, prices of technology stocks started falling. As a result of these events, investors started bailing out of any security viewed as risky, and fled to the safety of government bonds. This caused rates on Treasury securities to fall further. And all this while the Fed is trying to raise rates!

In the first three months of this year, the 10-Year Treasury note dropped nearly one full percentage point, to well under 6.00 percent. Mortgage rates haven't dropped this much, because the interest rate "spread" between mortgages and Treasury securities is getting wider at this time. One of the main reasons behind this is that rates on mortgages tend to change a little slower. Investors want to make sure that the market changes for interest rates are lasting before pushing mortgage rates lower.

According to the Bank Rate Monitor, the average rate for a 30-Year Fixed Rate mortgage is now slightly below 8.20 percent, which is down from 8.50 percent only two months ago. Fifteen-year loans go for 7.50 percent and a homeowner can get a One-Year Adjustable for 6.64 percent. The trends are clearly in the right direction, toward lower rates.

Experts believe there is more room to go. Some are calling for mortgage rates to fall by as much as 1/2 percent, which would really give a boost to the housing market. The Wall Street types want to see some stability in the markets first before this will happen; both for stocks and bonds. A quiet political season will also help.

Robert B. Segal, CFA is sales manager at Brockton Credit Union, which has offices in Brockton, Easton, Canton, Randolph, Abington, Middleboro and East Bridgewater and offers a full range of conventional mortgage loan programs, construction loans, FHA, MHFA and first-time homebuyer loans.

MainSpring House Charity Open golf tournament set for June 8

It's that time of year again — time to hit the links for a day of fun and excitement at the 16th annual charity golf tournament to benefit Brockton's MainSpring House homeless shelter. Jack Conway and Company Realtors, the tournament sponsor, has announced that this year's fundraiser will be held Thursday, June 8, at the Easton Country Club.

Contributors may sponsor a hole for $250, a tee or a green for $125, a cart for $50, or can donate raffle prizes as a way to participate in the event, said Denis Lilla, Conway's vice president of sales. To participate, golfers donate $90, which includes the cost of the greens fee, golf cart, a luncheon buffet and tournament prizes.

Since 1985, Conway's annual tournament has raised more than $140,000 to help defray operating costs of the shelter.

"We look forward to this event every year," said Lilla, the tournament organizer. "We are proud to be the corporate sponsor of this event, which benefits so many people. Our goal this year is to raise more than $12,000 for MainSpring House."

Founded in 1982, MainSpring House is operated by the Brockton Coalition for the Homeless (BCH) and provides shelter, food, clothing and services such as adult education courses, case management and referrals to individuals and families in need. The Conway House, BCH's facility for homeless families in Middleboro, was named in honor of Jack and Patti Conway to recognize their support of the organization.

Registration for the MainSpring House Charity Open begins at 7:30 a.m., and play opens at 8 a.m. with a shotgun start. To participate, sponsor a green, tee, or cart, or to make a charitable donation, call Denis Lilla, (781) 871-0080, ext. 327.

Founded in 1957, Norwell-based Jack Conway and Company is the largest independently owned real estate company in Massachusetts, with more than 600 agents in 36 offices from Boston to Cape Cod.

Dan Flynn stands in front of 500 Washington Street in Weymouth slated to be the future home of the new CVS pharmacy.

Flynn & Company brokers $4.5M Weymouth transaction

Daniel J. Flynn & Co., Inc. CEO Dan Flynn has negotiated the $4.5 million sale of 500 Washington St., Weymouth. The 3.2-acre site was sold by South Shore Entertainment Group of Weymouth to Opportunity Acquisition Fund, LLC of Waltham.

The site is slated to be the future home of a new CVS Pharmacy. Demolition of the existing 14,000-square-foot building on the site will begin this spring. The building is the former home of the Sports Resort nightclub. Construction of a new 12,000-square-foot building will also begin this spring under the supervision of Boston-based Marlin Development.

"The development of this site will allow the area to capitalize on its huge potential," said Flynn & Co. CEO Dan Flynn. "At the junction of two major routes, the site offers great exposure and traffic flow, conditions under which a retail business will thrive. This is an ideal site for a pharmaceutical operation."

Daniel J. Flynn & Co. is a full service real estate firm specializing in commercial sales and leasing, residential real estate and real estate auctions. For more information, call 617-479-9000, or visit their website at www.djflynn.com.

Brudnoy AT THE MOVIES

Minnie Driver and David Duchovny discover that romance is right up their alley.

Return to Me (B)

We talk, always, of the heart as the center of emotions, of feelings, of soul, knowing full well that the heart is a pump and the brain does the emoting, feeling and soulful searching for us. The heart as metaphor seems to be age-old and shows no sign of being replaced by any metaphorical romanticizing of the frontal lobe. The heart as invaluable for life is central more to medical diagnoses than to poetry, and it is as literally taken, as well as metaphorically laden, that the heart is central to "Return to Me," a sometimes silly, never very deep, but satisfactorily comforting romantic comedy-drama.

Early on, the lovely wife (Joely Richardson) of a builder, Bob (David Duchovny), is feted for her work on behalf of the primates at the Chicago zoo; immediately thereafter, Bob is shown running after a hospital cart, bloodied and tattered, his wife the patient, who soon dies. Meanwhile, a young woman, Grace (Minnie Driver), is visited in the hospital by both her best friend, Megan (Bonnie Hunt, who also directed), and her grandfather, Marty O'Reilly (Carroll O'Connor). Grace is in need of a heart and is waiting for one to be made available. You don't need Hercule Poirot to figure out whose heart Grace gets.

But neither Grace nor Bob, whom she meets about a year later as the still-grieving widower is forced out on a double date by his best friend (David Alan Grier), is aware of what we are certain. A spark is kindled, as Grace, who serves as a waitress in her granddad's Irish-Italian bar and restaurant, and Bob, who has been set up with the blind date from Hell but recognizes in the unassuming Grace a kind of soul-mate, begin to see each other socially. This PG-rated movie never for a moment even suggests a sexual ingredient to their relationship; as happens, Grace is embarrassed by the scar on her chest from the heart transplant and hasn't yet shown so much as her upper body to Bob, much less mentioned that she is carrying someone else's heart. The rating fairly indicates that this is about as close to a chaste romantic comic drama as you can imagine.

"Return to Me" has its dubious moments, as when granddad and his cronies, notably Robert Loggia as the restaurant's chef, Angelo, dissolve into stereotypical discussions of the relative merits of various Irish-or-Italo-American singers. One expects a dissolve into shots of Sinatra warbling, followed by Bing Crosby crooning. We are spared that but not much else in this, the least satisfying element of the film. And we get friend Megan's home life, replete with the son who repeats every naughty word that he hears and a husband (James Belushi) who is nobody's idea of a knock-me-dead hunk, but is a fine exemplar of the spouse as solid rock of contentment. This is, after all, a romance, and after the secret that we know and they don't know is placed before them, there is the expectable rift and then, you knew it, didn't you, the reconciliation. All's well that ends well.

Rules of Engagement (B)

At the risk of alienating Arab audiences, who are frequently smeared by their portrayal on screen, "Rules of Engagement," a gung-ho melodrama lacking nuance but imbued with energy owing to its stars' full-bore involvement in their roles, does not only that but also slams the United States government. The cinema would do well to try to moderate its habitual portrayal of Arabs as conniving rascals, but an occasional does of government-bashing can be refreshing. This formulaic, but handsomely done and earnestly conceived film, tells of a valiant Marine dealt a lousy hand by the brass, and of his friend, another Marine, who comes to his rescue.

We meet our guys first in Vietnam, where Terry Childers (Samuel L. Jackson) saves the life of his buddy, Hays Hodges (Tommy Lee Jones). Then we are 30 years later in Yemen, where Childers, now a colonel, leads a small helicopter crew into rescuing the ambassador (Ben Kingsley) and his family from a protest that has turned dangerous. Fired upon by snipers on nearby roofs, and by protestors in the crowd below, Childers orders his men to shoot at the people below, with expectable results. The Marines save the ambassador and his family and speed them to safety.

But the rescue mission has caused a diplomatic incident, and the U.S. government, personified here in the national security adviser (Bruce Greenwood), decides that the blame will be squarely placed on Childers' shoulders, and a videotape that would document his assertion that the crowd was firing at his men will be suppressed.

This movie doesn't go in for surprises, but rather for standard expected scenarios, and we next have Childers prevailing upon Hodges, whom, you will recall, he saved in Vietnam, to save him now by acting as his defense attorney. Jackson, one of our dozen best actors, runs a half gamut of his emotions through this movie, leaving out his comic attributes and stressing his morose presentation, his furious incarnation and his resolve. Jones, who always carries with him a heavy load of cynicism, allows his characters to exhibit a modicum of mellowness midst the earnest savior incarnation. The two actors relate beautifully, both in a bonding experience and in their strategizing sessions.

The court-martial is by-the-book, with the ambassador lying his head off about what happened, and the military prosecutor (Guy Pearce), doing all that he can to bring the full weight of military "justice" down on Childers. Fans of courtroom drama may find this part of the film somehow deficient in pizzazz, and the experts on the subject may fault it for too many unlikely turns and twists. Films like these needn't be taken as serious explorations of topics that matter, but at least there is something of worth in showing that our government can, indeed, play dirty, damning tricks.

COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

Q. At one time, you mentioned that buying airline tickets over the Internet from a foreign airline may be advantageous price-wise when traveling within Europe. A friend and I are keen to travel to see some friends in Newcastle, England, in a few months, and I was wondering if you could recommend a foreign Web site where we could find a good fare.

A. Many discount European airlines maintain Web sites where you can find amazing bargains for travel within Europe. Recently, Ryan Air, based in Dublin, Ireland, offered London-Dublin round trips for 4 pounds (that's about $6.50) on its Web site, and, no, that's not a misprint! You wouldn't find that fare on a Web site like Travelocity or Expedia, and it wouldn't be available from your travel agent either. They're currently offering London-Shannon, Ireland, for 7 pounds round trip.

Here are some sites to check out:

Jersey European Airways: www.jea.co.uk. Easyjet: www.easyjet.com.

Go: www.go-fly.com Ryan Air: www.ryanair.ie.

Buzz: www.buzzaway.com.

Spanair: www.spanair.com.

Air Europe: www.aireurope.it.

However, you're probably better off taking the train from London to Newcastle. Although British Airways flies the route for $76 round trip currently, by the time you get out to the airport, go through security, and deal with weather delays, you'd be in Newcastle. And the train is cheaper. To book online, visit www.virgin-trains.co.uk.

Q. I am planning on renting a car in Italy. Can I use my credit card to cover collision damage?

A. That depends on the credit card. American Express does not cover collision damage in Italy; Diners Club and Visa do; with MasterCard, it depends on the rental car agency (some do, some don't). Amex and Visa also don't provide coverage in Ireland, Israel and Jamaica; and Amex excludes Australia and New Zealand). In general, Diners Club offers the best rental car protection, and the yearly fee can pay for itself if you rent often.

Most credit card collision insurance is "secondary," meaning that the credit card company expects your other sources of insurance, if any, to pay first and then they'll pick up anything left over, but Diners Club offers "primary" insurance, meaning that you don't need to tap other sources first.

Also, credit cards only cover collision damage with another vehicle; not damage to other objects, such as buildings, rocks or, heaven forbid, people, so you should look into liability coverage as well.

Q. I'm a senior citizen who will be traveling on a safari this summer in Africa. I'm concerned about what might happen should I fall ill and need medical care that's not available abroad.

Is there insurance that pays for transporting a sick or injured person back to the United States for proper treatment?

A. Emergency medical evacuation insurance is an important safeguard to consider when traveling abroad, since if you need expert care in a less developed country, your only option may be to get airlifted back to the United States.

Unfortunately, many insurance providers limit the maximum age for coverage to 75 or under; and some have so much fine print that it's difficult to figure out what's covered and what's not. A few companies to consider (ask them as many questions as you can think of, such as whether acts of terrorism or pre-existing conditions are covered):

Access America: (800) 284-8300, (www.accessamerica.com).

Health Care Global: (800) 237-6615.

Medex International: (800) 732-5309, (www.medexassist.com).

Traveler's Emergency Network: (800) ASK4-TEN (www.tenweb.com).

Worldwide Assistance: (800) 331-1609, (www.worldwideassistance.com).

Q. I want to share my experience booking an airline ticket online vs. purchasing it directly through an airline. I am attending a wedding in Europe this summer and I checked the various online sites for the cheapest fare available on an airline that I earn frequent-flyer miles with.

The British Airways Web site showed the lowest fare at $432.60 plus taxes, fuel surcharges, departure taxes and so on, which added about $100 to the fare. Then I called British Airways directly and discovered that they'd sell me a ticket inclusive of all these extra charges for even less than the Web site fare.

A. Booking online is a crap shoot. Sometimes, airlines reserve their very best fares only on their own Web sites, sometimes they don't. We saw incredibly low fares a few months ago on Continental to Europe and Japan that were not available by phone or on booking sites like Expedia, and they were better than anything I've seen offered by a consolidator. In general, Travelocity and Expedia should be used as a base line to compare fares you can get by other means.

I've heard stories about people getting great fares with Priceline and Expedia's auction service as well. So you should compare every method: airline toll-free number, travel agent, airline Web site, Travelocity, Expedia, consolidators, and auction sites, and then go with whomever offers the best price. Thanks for sharing your experience.

The Jerusalem Road parcel known as Moors Rocks was donated to the Cohasset Historical Society in 1949. The 50-year deed restriction barring the site from development expired last year.

Jerusalem Road site a source of controversy

Historical society won't renew the deed restriction

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The resident who donated a parcel of land on the Jerusalem Road seacoast to the Cohasset Historical Society in 1949 for conservation purposes no longer has a guarantee the land will remain undeveloped in perpetuity.

Adelaide Pratt inherited the property, known as Moors Rocks, from her grandfather, Benjamin Moors, over 50 years ago. She donated the parcel to the historical society because she wanted to see the property remain untouched. Back then, there was no conservation trust in town as there is today.

"I didn't want the town to own it, because I was afraid they would sell it," Pratt said. "The hope we all had was to preserve Cohasset the way it was."

"I've told the historical society what I want, and I think it will all be done. I don't want the property to change in any way."
— Adelaide Pratt

In order to accomplish that goal, Pratt donated the land to the historical society with a 50-year deed restriction forbidding the development of the property, one of the last untouched pieces of land along the seacoast providing the public with an unobstructed view of Massachusetts Bay.

The 50-year restriction on development expired at the end of 1999, however. The historical society, the legal owner of the property, has elected not to renew the deed restriction, opening the door for possible development of the property in the future.

"We're interested in conserving the property, but we didn't want to bind future boards of trustees by putting on another restriction," said historical society president John Hovorka.

The Cohasset Conservation Trust has made inquiries over the past few years in an attempt to purchase the property, but those offers have been rejected by the historical society.

John Hartshorne, president of the conservation trust, said an offer of $10,000 was rejected several years

Senior housing lacking in town

Selectmen ask for solutions

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

After hearing the results of a housing needs survey filled out by 144 of the town's senior citizens, selectmen said the need for a senior-only housing project is long overdue.

"We need to set aside a multi-unit development specifically for seniors."
— Selectman Michael Sullivan

"We need to set aside a multi-unit development specifically for seniors," said selectman Michael Sullivan.

Selectmen chairman Thomas Callahan agreed, saying a senior housing project must include a provision which allows the units to only be sold to seniors.

Callahan said a permit which would give zoning relief to developers in order to create units which are initially sold to seniors would not solve the town's senior housing dilemma.

Because many of those comprehensive permits allow the units to be resold to anyone, Callahan said such housing would only be a quick fix.

"A comprehensive permit is not the way to go," Callahan said. "What we need are senior housing condos, like the River's Edge complex in East Bridgewater. Those can only be sold to seniors 55 and

Lightkeepers Memorial ready to be unveiled

Residents invited to attend May 21

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Anyone in Cohasset who likes to see dreams come true should mark May 21 on their calendars.

On that day, 86-year-old Herb Jason will witness the culmination of his lifetime dream, when the memorial to Minot Ledge lighthouse keepers Joseph Antoine and Joseph Wilson is unveiled.

Jason has been fascinated with Antoine and Wilson since he was a young boy growing up in town, when his mother told him the story of the young lightkeepers who lost their lives during a ferocious storm in 1851.

Tuesday night, Jason and friend Wigmore Pierson, general chairman of the Lightkeepers Memorial committee, came before selectmen to tell the board about the events planned for the May 21 unveiling and dedication ceremony.

The ceremony will begin at Government Island at 1 p.m. with a musical prelude by the Forte Brass Quartet. An hour later, the official party will arrive, including Jason, state Sen. Robert Hedlund, and state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray. Pierson said U.S. Rep. William Delahunt and U.S. Sen. Edward Kennedy have indicated they will try to attend as well.

Once the official party arrives, the Coast Guard Color Guard will present the colors and the national anthem will be sung by Lily Sestito. After an invocation by the Rev. Gary Ritts, brief remarks will be made by members of the official party, followed by an address by Douglas Bingham of the American Lighthouse Foundation.

At approximately 2:45 p.m., Jason's longtime dream will come true as he unveils the statue along with brother Kenneth Jason and grandson John Small, a Cohasset police officer.

"It's an event the town can be very proud of. I invite all citizens to come and come early."
— Wigmore Pierson, chairman of Lightkeepers Memorial committee

Following the unveiling, the American flag will be raised by one Girl Scout and one Boy Scout. A bell will then be tolled three times in tribute to Antoine, Wilson, and all other lightkeepers who have given their lives in the call of duty.

Three wreaths will then be laid in Cohasset Harbor, after which the Rev. John Mulvehill will offer the benediction. Guests will then be invited to join in the singing of "God Bless America" which will conclude the ceremony.

After the ceremony concludes, the public will be invited to tour the Coast Guard Cutter "Pendant" and can head up to the Lightkeepers' Residence for refreshments.

"It's an event the town can be very proud of," Pierson said. "I invite all citizens to come and come early."

Jason thanked selectmen for their support of the granite memorial, which seemed only a pipe dream a few years ago.

"I'd like to thank you and [Town Manager] Mark Haddad for being behind this project," Jason told selectmen. "Without your support, this never could have happened."

Selectmen chairman Thomas Callahan thanked Jason for his unyielding work in making the project a reality.

"We're very appreciative of what you've done," he told Jason.

Insurance rate hikes hit town

A 14-1/2 percent increase in the town's health insurance rates as administered by Blue Cross/Blue Shield has caused selectmen to authorize Town Manager Mark Haddad to seek a cheaper rate through the Mass. Inter-local Insurance Association.

Haddad said the MIIA could cover town employees under HMO Blue for only a 12 percent increase.

Town employees will still be covered under the same Blue Cross/Blue Shield HMO Blue program they currently are covered by. Only the administration of the plan will change.

"Town employees will have the same benefits, the same deductible, the same drug program, the same everything," Haddad said. "We're going to save money on the administrative costs and they'll manage the program better than Blue Cross has."

Selectman Michael Sullivan couldn't believe the extent of the Blue Cross rate hike.

"How can they justify that?" Sullivan asked. "They're getting all kinds of new business because of the problems over at Harvard Pilgrim."

Haddad said Blue Cross has the authority to set its rates as the company sees fit.

Visitor parking at Government Island

At Tuesday's selectmen's meeting, selectman Merle Brown suggested the town look into the creation of some kind of visitor parking at Government Island.

Between functions at the Lightkeepers Residence and visitors to the Minot Ledge Lighthouse Replica and the new Lightkeepers Memorial, Brown said the demand for visitor parking is huge.

"What do we do about visitors?" Brown asked. "We've made Government Island a tourist spot but there's nowhere to park without getting a ticket."

Selectman Michael Sullivan said it would make sense to have some designated visitor parking at Government Island to meet the demand.

Fellow selectman Thomas Callahan said police should be more lenient on ticketing when functions are being held at the Lightkeepers Residence.

"I don't know that you can keep ticketing people for going to a wedding reception," Callahan said.

Town history moving along

The third volume of the Cohasset Town History, which will cover the period from 1950-2000, is under budget and is planned to be completed sometime in 2001.

Author Jackie Dormitzer and Town History committee members Wigmore Pierson and Jim Hamilton appeared before selectmen Tuesday night to appraise the board of the book's progress.

Pierson said 353 advance copies of the volume have already been sold, at a price of $20 each. He said the price will likely be between $30 and $35 once the book is published.

Dormitzer is writing the book in chronological order and has already finished the 1950s and 1960s. She said it's taken about six months to write the history of each decade and is about to start chapters on the 1970s.

The town has appropriated $65,000 for the project and Hamilton said the book will be able to be published well within that budget.

"This book will be done before the Big Dig and it will be under budget," he said.

Hamilton said the book will be about 384 pages, will feature a dust jacket, and could even feature an insert of color photographs.

Dormitzer said photographs are needed from the 1950s through the 1980s, which will be scanned and returned to the owner.

"We're looking for pictures of schoolchildren, parades, the colorful things that happened in those days," she said. "We're also looking for pictures of downtown Cohasset and the old farms from the 1950s."

Train committee

Selectmen are still seeking three citizens to serve on the Greenbush Mitigation Committee that is negotiating with the MBTA about mitigation for the train. Interested residents should call the selectmen's office at 383-4105.

ConCom members

Selectman Merle Brown said the conservation commission needs associate members. A full member will step down in June and the commission needs to get someone on board as an associate now who can become a full member in a few months, he said. Anyone interested should call the selectman's office at 383-4105 or contact a conservation commissioner.

No more brush

Brush is no longer being accepted at the RTF. Grass clippings and leaves may be placed in the compost pile, DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield said.

Open Space survey

A survey from the Open Space Committee has been included in this quarter's tax bills.

Debbie Cook, chairman of the Open Space Committee, urges residents to take the time to fill out the questionnaire because the results will help the Open Space Committee define open space and recreation priorities during the next five years.

"Every five years the state mandates that towns file an open space and recreation plan. Our plan expires in June 2001, and the Open Space Committee is in the process of updating it. If we don't have an active plan, we won't be eligible for many state grant and loan programs," she said.

Forms are available in the town hall and library, and surveys may be left in the drop boxes at both locations.

The Open Space Committee is also looking for one new member. Anyone interested should call Cook at 383-6313.

Injured swan on the mend

Hit with dart from blowgun

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

A beloved neighborhood swan is recovering at the New England Wildlife Center after two, 13-year-old Hingham boys allegedly shot the animal with a dart from a blowgun at Foundry Pond where the swan and its mate were nesting.

Police, neighbors and animal health officials were stunned by the incident that was reported at about 5:20 p.m. Monday.

"The swans are like family," said John Bibby of 122 Kilby St. in Hingham, about the birds that return to Foundry Pond every year. "We're bird lovers, I'm in shock."

Hingham police Lt. Taylor Mills said when police arrived at the scene, the swan — in "obvious distress" — had a five-inch long metal dart embedded in its abdomen.

The boys who used a three-foot-long, illegal blowgun called the "Terminator," could faces charges of possession of a dangerous weapon — a felony — and animal cruelty that could carry a fine of $1,000, imprisonment for a year or both, Mills said. Blowguns are illegal in Massachusetts.

The swan was captured with the assistance of the Animal Rescue League of Boston, called in because the state Environmental Police were tied up, Mills said.

The good news is that the swan is in very good shape, said Matt Laing, clinic director at the New England Wildlife Center off Fort Hill Street in Hingham.

Laing explained that the dart, which had been removed before the bird arrived at the center, had a tip "like a needle." It entered the bird's side under the wing and did not leave much of a hole.

"There was no blood on the feathers and no bruising," Laing said. However, had the dart hit the bird's head or broken a blood vessel, it could have killed the swan, he said.

Ironically, the center discovered the swan had a foot infection from a cut — unrelated to the blowgun incident —which could have become life threatening.

"It was a horrible thing that happened," Laing said about the shooting. "But it was a good thing the swan was brought in to the center because its foot was badly infected."

Laing expects the swan to be released back to Foundry Pond in seven to 10 days. He said the female swan that is nesting should be OK in the interim as long as another swan pair doesn't move on the pond. The male would keep another pair off, he said.

"The swans are like family. We're bird lovers, I'm in shock."
— John Bibby, 122 Kilby St., Hingham

"But at this point, breeding pairs should all be on their ponds," Laing said.

He explained that swans live about 15 to 20 years and mate for life, but if a mate dies, the surviving swan will look for another.

Officer Rigaud Lee of the law enforcement arm of the Animal Rescue League said the league has taken over investigation of the blowgun incident with the help of Hingham police because it involves animal cruelty. He said the investigation is in its "early stages" and would not comment on whether charges against the two juveniles would be filed.

"Besides the Hingham police report, we have not had time to do any further investigation as of yet," Lee said Tuesday.

He said the league often investigates reports of people injuring animals by throwing rocks or shooting BB guns but darts from a blowgun are unusual.

Lisa Jermyn, 104 Kilby St., said her five-year-old daughter loves the swans and they often walk to the pond to feed them.

"How do you explain something like this to a 5-year-old?" she said.

Jermyn said she saw the boys with the blowgun with a bunch of kids walking up the street.

"I had no idea what it was," she said about the blowgun that she described as a long tube that is not wider than a quarter.

Lt. Mills of the Hingham police described the blowgun as something that native tribes, such as the Aborigines, use to kill prey. He said the boys apparently bought the weapon on Martha's Vineyard.

"It's a shame with regards to the swan," he said. "But with two 13-year-olds its lucky the dart didn't end up between some kid's eyes."

School councils seek candidates

The Nominating Committee of the Cohasset PSO is seeking candidates to run for parent representative to Cohasset's three school councils.

Comprised of the principal, teachers, parent representatives and community representatives, each school council is charged with formulating and updating that school's improvement plan, missions and goals, as well as establishing focus areas to be studied each year. Parent representatives are elected for a two-year term by the parent body of each school and must have a student(s) in attendance at the specific school they are serving for the duration of their term. Council positions open for the coming two-year term (2000-2002) include one seat at Joseph Osgood and two each at the Deer Hill and Middle/High School.

Individuals interested in serving as a parent representative are asked to submit a brief statement about themselves and their interest in the school council to the PSO Nominating Committee, c/o Susan Jaffe, 10 Wood Way, no later than Tuesday, May 2. Balloting will take place May 8-12. New council members will be introduced at the PSO annual meeting, May 16.

For more information about council responsibilities or the election process, call Susan Jaffe at 383-9858.

Time for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. and are held on alternate Tuesdays.

The next selectmen's meeting is Tuesday, May 8.

Local chefs add spice to Relay for Life

Restaurants will serve special dishes as part of the event

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

This year's Relay for Life to benefit the American Cancer Society will undoubtedly feature hundreds of enthusiastic walkers dedicated to raising money to fight the dreaded disease.

But even those walking for so noble a cause get a little hungry now and then.

In an effort to enhance the festive nature of the annual event and raise some additional funds for the American Cancer Society, this year's Relay for Life planning committee has decided to make food a more important part of the event.

The fourth annual Relay for Life will be held at the Cohasset High School track on Friday, June 9 through Saturday, June 10. From 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. on June 9, the high school cafeteria will be transformed into one of the South Shore's finest restaurants for the Taste of the Relay.

Approximately 10 to 15 of the area's best restaurants will contribute a sampling of a few dishes to the event, which will be open to the public for a minimum donation of $5.

"As soon as we came up with this as a new way to raise money for the Relay, the thing just took off. We're trying to get other restaurants involved as well."

— Jeff Mushin, chef and general manager of The Red Parrot in Hull

Relay for Life planning committee chairman Craig Bleicken said the involvement of local restaurants in the event was a natural.

"Last year, one of the things lacking was the availability of food," Bleicken said. "One of the biggest industries in our areas is restaurants, so it made sense to get them involved."

Bleicken immediately sought out good friend and Cohasset resident Jeff Mushin, chef and general manager at The Red Parrot in Hull, to help organize the Taste of the Relay.

Through his connections in the restaurant industry, Mushin has already lined up 10 local restaurants to participate in the event, including Cohasset's own Atlantica and Red Lion Inn, Jake's Seafood in Hull, and Seasons Cafe in Norwell.

"As soon as we came up with this as a new way to raise money for the Relay, the thing just took off," Mushin said. "We're trying to get other restaurants involved as well. It's a great community event for the restaurants to be a part of."

Bleicken said the Taste of the Relay will be held on June 9, rain or shine.

"Food brings people," Bleicken said. "I'm really excited about it, especially with the quality of the restaurants Jeff's lined up."

Mushin said each restaurant will bring two to three different dishes to the event, meaning attendees can sample anywhere from 20 to 30 dishes that night. All proceeds from the Taste of the Relay will benefit the American Cancer Society.

Anyone interested in being a part of the Relay for Life can come to the Captains' meeting at 7 p.m. on May 4 at the high school cafeteria.

"We're going to be looking for volunteers at the meeting," Bleicken said. "It's a good time for people to get involved."

American Cancer Society to host Relay for Life June 9-10

The American Cancer Society will host the fourth annual Cohasset Relay For Life at Cohasset High School from 3 p.m. Friday, June 9, through noon Saturday, June 10.

At the relay, teams of eight or more people will round a track, 'round the clock,' to raise funds for the fight against cancer. Relay For Life planning committee members include: Craig Bleicken, Gordon Behrer, Hank Bradley, Karen Burns, Bob Clifford, Eileen Corbett, Shelly Donze, Chris Geyer, Ann Marie Goff, Jeff Mushin, Mary Nagle, Sarah Nott, Al Odermatt, Jeanne Pierce, Lyn Previte, Anna Mary Stewart, Charlie Towers, David Twohig, Justine and Victor Vanderlugt, Jacqui Vitello and Connie Zanoni.

According to Craig Bleicken, event chairman, the American Cancer Society hopes to raise $90,000. Team members collect sponsorships in advance and agree to keep one member on the track at all times.

"Each team will keep a representative on the track throughout the 21 hours, with members walking in shifts," said Bleicken. Relay teams represent families, clubs, churches, neighborhoods and companies and are encouraged to camp out in tents throughout the night and enjoy the festive atmosphere created by music, food and camaraderie. Starting the "night shift" will be a luminaria (candlelight) ceremony (9 p.m.) to both remember and honor loved ones that have had cancer.

"I encourage anyone interested in joining the Relay For Life to call me at 781-383-1502," Bleicken said. "The relay will be a great way to renew our hope in the fight against cancer, while also doing something practical to support the American Cancer Society's research, education and patient service programs."

Corporate sponsors for the relay include the Red Parrot Restaurant and the Red Lion Inn.

Funds raised during the relay will support American Cancer Society cancer control programs, including a research initiative that has supported 30 Nobel Prize winners during its history. The society is continuing the world's largest population study, which established the definitive connection between smoking and lung cancer and continues to examine factors that affect cancer risk.

The American Cancer Society is also a source for comprehensive information about cancer through its 1-800-ACS-2345 number, which operates 24 hours a day, seven days a week, in both English and Spanish. Funds raised during the Relay For Life support this service, which also connects callers to services offered for patients and families.

Local services provided by the American Cancer Society to cancer patients include transportation to outpatient treatment by Road to Recovery volunteer drivers, support for women with breast cancer through the Reach to Recovery visitor program, and information on maintaining personal appearance during treatment through the Look Good...Feel Better program.

More information about the American Cancer Society's fourth annual Cohasset Relay For Life is available by calling the American Cancer Society at 781-741-9844.

The Cohasset Mariner is proud to be the media sponsor for the American Cancer Society's fourth annual Cohasset Relay For Life.

30 years of Earth Days

Thirty years ago, about the time of the first Earth Day, a junior at Hudson Catholic High School did a science project on the state of the Assabet River. The boy, who had fished in the Assabet all his life, was particularly upset that the pollution in the river had forced the state to stop stocking it with trout.

Earth Day 1970 marked the birth of the modern environmental movement, a turning point when Americans came to realize the destructiveness of soiling our own nest, when cleaning up the nation's air and water became mainstream concerns. Young and old were inspired to action.

Americans got to work. We passed tougher laws and developed new ways of doing things. We built cleaner cars and factories. We started recycling our trash and we stopped dumping untreated sewage and factory wastes into our rivers. We changed things in a thousand ways to undo the damage a century of industrial-age neglect had done to the environment.

The boy from Hudson Catholic went on to politics, where as Sen. Bob Durand pushed legislation preserving open space and cleaning up all the rivers and streams of Massachusetts. And this year he brought the trout back to the Assabet, returning as state secretary of environmental affairs to preside over the first trout-stocking that river had seen in 30 years.

Durand's victory is one among many. Over the last three decades we've made the air measurably cleaner. We've protected wetlands and cleaned up toxic waste sites. We've restored the bald eagle and other endangered species. We've learned in important ways to tread more lightly on the earth.

We've learned other things as well. We've learned that the earth is more resilient than some environmental doomsayers feared. And we've learned that taking better care of the environment isn't the economic burden some corporate doomsayers had predicted. Most importantly, we've learned that our efforts can make a difference for the good of the planet.

Those lessons are needed more than ever, because there is much still to be done. While scientists and politicians have spent the last decade arguing over what, if anything, to do about global warming, we've experienced the six hottest years on record. The strain on the earth's water resources is visible from the water bans of MetroWest to dustbowls and famine in the Third World. Air pollution is a continuing concern here — and a life-threatening crisis in places like Mexico City and Shanghai.

There's plenty of work to be done close to home. There are small messes to be cleaned up, which is what volunteers on the South Shore will be doing in local Earth Day celebrations. There are global environmental threats that need the attention of local scientists and entrepreneurs.

Then there's the rapid growth that is daily changing the face of our communities and straining their natural resources. If we are to be good stewards of the earth, we must plan strategically, build carefully and protect natural spaces so our grandchildren will know something of the fields, streams and woodlands that make this a fine place to live.

The environmental movement is simultaneously local and global. It relies on small individual efforts, like picking up trash, and efforts that span the globe, like multinational agreements to reduce the greenhouse gases behind global warming.

And it takes all kinds of people: homeowners who recycle, business managers who conserve resources, high school students studying pollution in nearby rivers, state senators writing legislation and cabinet secretaries like Mr. Durand with the passion, political skill and policy expertise to make every day Earth Day.

LWV hosts speaker on special education

Special education is the topic as the Hingham League of Women Voters announces the final session in a series of three Education Issues Forums, Saturday, April 29 at 10 a.m. at the Hingham Public Library.

Louise Haldeman, the chairman of the Special Education Study for the League of Women Voters of Massachusetts will speak about special education topics and the results of a two-year League study.

Hingham LWV President Ellen Rossano said, "There is an intense debate going on right now about special education in Massachusetts, so this is very timely. Louise [Haldeman] is one of the most knowledgeable speakers on the topic and we are thrilled to have her coming."

The format of the session is informal, and participants will be able to ask questions of the forum leaders as part of the discussion. For further information regarding this session, call Hingham League President Ellen Rossano at (781) 740-8703.

Hagerty Building

BOARD OF SELECTMEN:

Undoubtedly the Selectmen are examining a recent proposal to merge the Lobster Lab with the Cohasset Maritime Institute. The proposal begins with a modest plan to make minor improvements to the building so as to provide a base for continuing studies of Cohasset Harbor by students. It suggests a range of further improvements, if and when funds are available, culminating in a full-fledged learning lab for marine biology and genetic studies.

The Board of Selectmen may be tempted to rescind the lease now held by the Lobster Lab on the grounds of non-performance in fund raising and renovation, and take steps to demolish the building. Or the Board might think of selling the building as a private residence in an attempt to recoup part of the cost of acquiring the Hagerty property, but such a plan is unlikely to go forward. (The Board once considered selling the building for commercial use, but consideration of such a use is unthinkable considering the hullabaloo about parking if used as a Lobster Lab). (Of course, if the building is torn down, the Town will be providing more parking spaces which may primarily benefit the marina across the street).

Surely this town can muster the energy and vision to do something with the building that serves the long-term public interest, especially the interest of our children. Once torn down, it would be very difficult to bring a new building to life, regardless of the worth of some belated plan to make public use of this unique waterfront site. Once sold, it is forever unavailable for public use such as a waterfront learning lab.

Whatever the failure in achieving the goals of the Lobster Lab project, whatever the flaws in the new proposal to merge it with the Maritime Institute, surely somehow this town can produce a group of sophisticated doers to give future generations of children a Marine Learning Lab that takes advantage of this uniquely located building, and takes advantage of the relevant talent so abundantly available in this town.

It is to be hoped, therefore, that the Board of Selectmen will eschew the easy path of demolition, and instead will encourage a public-spirited effort to use the building for the common good. Some naysayers will maintain that "we didn't purchase the property for the proposed use." What did we purchase it for, if not for some public benefit more sublime than merely providing a few more parking spaces?

Train negatives

TO THE EDITOR:

I never cease to be amazed at how those who are in favor of the Greenbush train either ignore — or are ignorant of — the facts as they overstate the benefits and understate the negatives of the impact of the train upon those of us who live in Cohasset.

Consider the letter published a few weeks ago from a long-time resident, who recalled the good ol' days when the train ran through town in the 1950s. Taking her letter point-by-point:

1. "If there was noise, we were used to it . . . " Unlike the 1950s, the federal transportation department in the early 1990s has required that trains blow their 110 decibel horns when they approach every grade crossing — which means that the thousands of people in this town who live within a quarter mile radius of the many grade crossings can forget about leaving their windows open on a nice summer evening, because the train will be blasting us out of our beds at 5:30 a.m. every morning. If anyone believes that this is the kind of noise you can "get used to," just ask anyone who lives near the grade crossings on T lines in Weymouth, Concord, or anywhere else — they'll tell you that a 100 decibel horn is not something you "get used to."

2. "Nobody ever got hurt . . . there were safety gates, bells, crossing guards . . ." Well, one young girl already has been killed by the new commuter train in another community because the T failed to install appropriate safety gates. That tragic accident was completely avoidable if the T had installed the proper gates from the beginning — and in my view, her death is on the hands of every T official who played any role in shortchanging considerations of safety matters. With the T under the fiscal gun even before it undertakes this $400 million boondoggle of a project, do any of us doubt that the T will skimp on safety matters with Greenbush?

3. "The real damage to our environment comes from the thousands of cars, trucks and SUVs . . . polluting the air and damaging the ozone layer." The truth about the alleged environmental benefits of the train has been known for a few years now, namely, that the diesel train will produce as much pollution as the 1,500 or so cars it supposedly will remove from the roads. (Originally, the T said that the train would be half as polluting as the cars it removes from the roads — but the T consultants forgot to take into account the train's round-trip!). Moreover, the pollution from the train will be diesel fumes, which are well-documented as much more directly harmful to human health than automobile pollution. Furthermore, this pollution will be concentrated along the corridor of the train line in our town, i.e., within a few hundred yards (or less) of our town's new library, swimming pool, playing fields, village area, and schools, not to mention all of the people who live in close proximity to the train.

4. "The boat does not take us anywhere near universities, museums, hospitals . . . cultural institutions." And the train, which will dump us out at South Station, will? The train will be a 45-minute ride from Cohasset to South Station (it will be 55 minutes from Greenbush). Does the letter-writer seriously think people will then ride the Red Line to the Green Line to go to the theater, symphony, or "other social engagements" at night, even assuming that there will be a train leaving South Station late enough to accommodate theater-goers, sports fans, etc.? The notion of the train as an "alternative" to driving into Boston for casual trips is absurd both because of the greatly added time and expense. A round trip to Boston on the train and subway on a Saturday or Sunday will take about three to four hours and require timing your departures with the weekend train schedule. Plus, with the cost of a R/T ticket on the train at about $8 and the $3 for parking in the T lot, a family of four is looking at about $30 in tickets costs — both of which are far more than the time to drive round-trip to Boston (no more than two hours, even with some traffic and the cost of parking. If anything, the train will be far less convenient for Cohasset commuters — the true target users of Greenbush — because the boat presently leaves them within an easy 10-minute (or less) walk to the financial district, which is where most of our resident-commuters work. South Station may work out better for some commuters, but for many others it will not.

5. "History . . ." As a recent article in this newspaper demonstrated, Cohasset was a far different place in the 1950s than it is today. Cohasset's population has doubled and I bet that the number of cars has tripled. Bringing back the train into today's environment by suggesting that it worked well 50 years ago is comparing apples with oranges.

I'd like to add two points, which the letter-writer, a senior citizen, did not mention.

The first is that the train will cost our town big bucks on its assessment from the T. MBTA officials won't discuss it, but all of us can be sure that our assessment will increase by at least a quarter of a million dollars, if not more, with annual increases in excess of the rate of inflation. With just 1,500 or so commuters using the train, Greenbush will not pay for itself on an operating basis, let alone pay for the $400 million in bonds plus interest — which means that the T will be looking to the communities it "serves" via increased assessments. Seniors in our town frequently complain about the high tax rate here — but they can be assured that with the train, every homeowner will be looking at a substantial tax increase within a few years to pay for our increased MBTA assessment.

Second, by introducing the train into our town, we'll become "partners" with the biggest bunch of bumbling bureaucrats in the state — MBTA officials — and that is not mere hyperbole. Every community which has dealt with the T has found these people to be not only incompetent, but disingenuous and outright deceitful, ultimately treating those whom they are supposed to be serving with contempt as if the public were the enemy.

Cohasset commuters have the boat, which gets us into Boston faster than the train will. Greenbush will benefit only a relative handful of commuters from Norwell and Marshfield (and even they can get from Scituate to Boston via a 20-minute car ride to Hingham and the 25-minute ride on the catamaran faster than the 55-minute train ride). Moreover, for a fraction of the $400 million cost of Greenbush, the T could upgrade the boat's docking and parking facilities, not to mention make a commuter-friendly connection to the nearby Blue Line.

As far as I can see, the train will have no benefits for our town and will have significant adverse consequences on our quality of life — and on top of that, we will have to pay for the "privilege." So what do we need it for?

COHASSET CARES

Voluntary simplicity

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

I've recently joined a Voluntary Simplicity group here in town. The concept is very big in the Pacific Northwest, where it has thousands of followers. There are many books, periodicals, and web sites on the subject, and it really is an important idea that is taking hold and going places. I would say Voluntary Simplicity is at the bull's eye of the environmental circle. Better make that the CARING circle, as in caring about the earth and the human race.

Have you thought much about whether you're living the way you really want to live? We're not talking as much about money here as we're talking about priorities, values. For example, what is your definition of happiness? Are things more important to you than time? Or, dare I say it, love? I came across an interesting quip the other day: hearses do not have top carriers. How important are people to you? How important is the environment to you? Do you feel you're on a treadmill without purpose? Are you unhappy about where a lot of your money is going?

We're not talking about Luddites here, anti-technology nuts [in fact, a surprising number of us have fuel cell stock] or Earth First! mavericks spiking trees. We do want to make more thoughtful use of our time. I keep thinking of the line from Wordsworth, "Getting and spending, we lay waste our powers" [and this was written about 150 years ago!]. Five percent of the world's population driving 32 percent of the world's cars. The majority of us are overweight and thousands dying of hunger every day. One of The Boston Globe writer Bella English's articles we've been looking at is entitled "The best things in life aren't things." One of Linda Weltner's, "Our stuff is eating away at us." Curious? Or are you curious?

At last night's meeting we watched a video entitled "Advertising and the End of the World." When I first heard of the title I said to myself, "Ridiculous. Sounds like a comic book. How crummy could this video really be?" I've seen the video twice now, and I want to see it about six more times. Some of the 14 people watching last night, an assortment of area residents not just from First Parish U.U., which is sponsoring the meetings, were taking notes like mad. Others of us gasped and clenched and unclenched our hands. A very spirited but eerie discussion followed the profoundly disturbing video.

Made by a specialist in modern culture at UMass/Amherst, the presentation explains in jarringly logical steps, substantiated by advertising clips all along the way, how America has developed into a society that now is subjected to 3,600 bits of commercial advertising a day. That's each of us Americans getting exposed to 3,600 advertising bits per day. The video shows how advertising panders to the basic desire for happiness, using staggering budgets and in-your-face promotion because we basically intuit that material objects do not create happiness. The video says that in the process of our mad consumer rush, we Americans are depleting world resources at a rate which will probably bring down the curtain in about 70 years. Either the present generation, sees the light about this insidious corruption that we are doing to ourselves, or our present value system will probably destroy us.

See you next time.

Changes are happening at Wellspring

LOCAL VIEW

LUCY HORWITZ

Wellspring, Hull's 15-year-old Multi-Service Center, is undergoing a series of changes. The thrift shop is moving. The shop has re-opened at its new quarters at 814 Nantasket Ave., just two doors down from its former location.

The move is just one part of the major changes which Wellspring is undergoing. By adding the storefront which formerly housed a bicycle shop to the Wellspring complex, we've acquired the space needed for an expansion of programs. The Adult Learning Program is now doubling in size. We are also hoping to add new programs, such as computer classes for the community, career counseling for our clients and on-site babysitting for our students.

One result of this expansion is the need for a full-time executive director. Marguerite Haider, who has been director of Wellspring on a part-time basis, is leaving us. She has been our leader for 10 years, and she will be greatly missed. We have been extremely lucky, however, to have obtained the services of a new full-time director. Dr. Jo Loughnane, Hull educator, will be taking the position in June. Jo is no stranger to us. A long time supporter of Wellspring, Jo has served on our board in the past. We look forward to working with her again.

Moving our thrift shop two doors down the street has been (and still is, as I write this), a considerable task, and one that we could not have accomplished without the generous help of some dedicated staff and volunteers. To begin with, the Detullios have done a great job of sprucing up the place from floor to ceiling. Then Cindy Farlen, our shopkeeper, recruited her whole family to help with the move. She's painted all the new shelving, which her husband, Joe, installed and her children, Sean, Calvin and Patrick helped fill. Other people who have helped are Janet Duprey and her children, Michael, 10, and Sara, 7. Florence Adams and Dot Gauthier have offered their services, and more volunteers are turning up as we move toward opening day. Many thanks to all.

For those who've come to make donations in the last week or two only to find that we couldn't accept them because of the move, the good news is that the ban on donations ended on the 26th. The bad news is that we still can accept only seasonal clothing, clean and gently worn. And we will have room for only small household items — no couches or refrigerators, please. For those of you who have come to shop, there's only good news. Besides all the lovely barely used items (why would anyone discard this?) that you are used to finding, a source of new items has recently surfaced. Yellow Freight of Abington is a company that delivers merchandise to stores. Sometimes the packaging or some of the merchandise is damaged in transit, and not accepted by the stores. Even the undamaged portions of this merchandise used to be discarded. Now thanks to a creatively thinking friend, it is being delivered to Wellspring. If you are lucky, you might find a lovely brand new sweater, a bath mat, children's clothing, a set of drinking glasses, or who knows what other treasures, all new and undamaged.

The store hours remain unchanged (Tuesday, Wednesday, Saturday 10 a.m. to 1 p.m.; Thursday, Friday 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.) as does our telephone number: 781-925-3211.

The trouble with DNA

We've got to do something about this deoxyribonucleic acid.

It's taking all the romance out of history.

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Just the other day, deoxyribonucleic acid — or DNA, as it is known to those of us who can't spell — proved beyond a shadow of a doubt that the 10-year-old boy who died in prison in France in 1795 really was the Dauphin, the son of the late Louis XVI and therefore the heir to the French throne.

For the last 200-plus years, the story has been buzzing around in academic and fiction circles that the youngster whose body was found in the Temple Tower, the Paris prison, was that of another lad and the real Dauphin was whisked away, alive and well, to live on in the world of romance.

Alive or not, the Lost Dauphin would live on in literature, much like the Grand Duchess Anastasia of Russia, who either was or was not murdered by the Bolsheviks.

Fortunately, one of the doctors who performed the autopsy on the kid, kept the heart as a souvenir, which enabled scientists in the 21st Century to compare its DNA to that of descendants of Marie Antoinette, Louis XVI's queen and mother of the Dauphin. It was a match.

Of course, that means only that Marie Antoinette of "let them eat cake!" fame was the Dauphin's mother and I'm told that many of the old-time kings passed their titles on to their sister's kids since a number of the old-time queens developed a roving eye while the old-time kings were off on the Crusades.

It's taking all the romance out of history.

But I digress . . .

"There are many French who are going to be disappointed by today's news," said Guy Wallen, a retired professor of science who attended the DNA announcement. "In France there are many who love the mystery, the intrigue."

Their numbers would include the many novelists and screen writers who have cashed in on tales of the Lost Dauphin not to mention the large number of alleged "descendants" who pop up periodically to lay claim to the French throne.

As a matter of fact, I understand there are several claimants to the French throne, which ceased to exist with the Emperor Napoleon III 130 years ago, including the descendants of Childeric III, who was euchred out of the job by his chief of staff, Pepin the Short, father of Charlemagne, in the year 751 AD.

The French keep close track of such things although it may be a little late to dig up and examine the remains of the late Childeric.

But again I digress . . .

This DNA thing is raising hob with what we learned as history in school, like what Thomas Jefferson liked to do in his spare time.

Certainly, my third grade teacher didn't tell me that Tom took to messin' around with the slave girls when Martha wasn't looking.

Then again, I'm not sure I would have understood what she meant by messin' around, although I was regarded as a precocious lad.

POLITICAL NOTEBOOK

State senate primary election fever starts early

By Jeanne M. Rideout
STAFF WRITER

Primary election fever is already beginning for the contenders in the race for the Plymouth-Norfolk Senate seat.

The district includes Weymouth, Cohasset, Duxbury, Hingham, Hull, Scituate, Marshfield and a portion of Braintree.

Papers are due at town hall 5 p.m. on Tuesday, May 2, for all races except statewide offices, such as governor, and congress.

Incumbent Sen. Robert Hedlund is currently unopposed.

In the race for the Senate Democratic nomination are James Cantwell, a Weymouth attorney, and Ted LeClair of Marshfield, founder of LeClair Brothers Cranberry Company.

Both Democrats have upcoming events!

Jim Cantwell will be meeting again with fellow Weymouth residents this Sunday, April 30, at 7 p.m. at the home of Bob and Christine Lalond, 35 Hilldale Rd., South Weymouth.

Cantwell was recently featured on Bob Villa's nationally televised "Restore America" program. Cantwell was one of ten Massachusetts natives interviewed for the program, which aired nationally last Sunday night.

Cantwell was featured because of his role as a leader of a grassroots effort that saved former United State Senator Daniel Webster's Marshfield estate from a threatened development of high-density condominiums.

"The Daniel Webster preservation project was the result of diligent work by dozens of concerned citizens," Cantwell said. "Here in Weymouth, we are faced with numerous developments that will starkly change the character of our community. We need to continue being vigilant in protecting our quality of life while promoting reasonable, planned growth."

Cantwell lives in South Weymouth with his wife Jen and their six-month old son, Christopher.

For more information about Cantwell's campaign, call Maureen Hilton, 335-4970; Linda Broadford, 331-1381; or Terry Steele, 337-7053.

Ted LeClair is hosting a Super Coffee Hour, according to campaign manager Kerrianne Karlberg.

The Super Coffee Hour is scheduled for Thursday, May 4, from 7 to 9 p.m. at the Weymouth Elks Club, 1197 Washington Street, Weymouth. Children are welcome to attend.

The host committee for the event are the following Weymouth residents: Bill and Mary Burke, Carol Striano Karlberg, Tony and Maureen DelPrete, Evoynne McGrory, Bill Ryan, Jim Weydt, Scott Curry, Linda Allen, John and Rita Doyle, Charlie Horner, Vic and Toni Solimini, Julie and Craig Hall, Mary and Naif Akoury, Jack and Susan Carey, Kerrianne Karlberg, Sandy Clawson, Susan and Tim Peters, Dave and Maureen Chandler, Richard and Mary Connolly, Mary Sue Ryan, Jim and Mary Keenan, Jack Sheehan, Dave and Barbara Wight, Jill Reddish, Dick Steele, and Jim Roche.

Sen. Robert Hedlund

James Cantwell

Ted LeClair

LeClair is a former decorated naval officer and founder of LeClair Brothers Cranberry Company, a supplier of cranberries to wholesalers and distributors, and part owner of Webster Cranberry Company. He is a native of Scituate and current resident of Marshfield. More information on LeClair's candidacy is available by calling (781) 837-7531.

On the Republican side of the ticket, the State Republican Party has scheduled a delegate selection caucus for the presidential nomination this Saturday, April 29, at South Middle School in Plymouth, between Long Pond Road and Route 3. Take Exit 5 off Route 3.

Three delegates and three alternates will be chosen to attend this summer's convention in Philadelphia. Participants should being proof of voter registration from their local town clerk and arrive at the school no later than 10 a.m. Doors will close at 11. The caucus will run from noon to 2.

For more information, call Anne Hilbert, 337-3743.

Senior housing lacking in town, officials say

older. I think that's the way we should go."

The comments by selectmen came after they heard from the town's senior housing committee, which has been working in conjunction with the McCormack Institute of Public Affairs at UMass-Boston on the town's recently completed senior housing survey.

Senior housing committee chairman Jim Lagrotteria said the results of the survey showed seniors have concerns about a lack of available options for seniors who want to stay in Cohasset but escape the property tax burden they face in their current homes.

"The overwhelming conclusion of the survey was that senior housing is needed," Lagrotteria said. "The rising tax rates were the foremost concern of three-quarters of the residents. The average tax bill in town is $5,400 and some seniors are existing on only $15,000 a year. That's a frightening situation."

A majority of the survey's respondents indicated they would like to stay in Cohasset, but were concerned about being able to live in town in the future. In identifying the factors which might influence them to leave, 88 percent said property tax rates would be a "very important or somewhat important factor."

While acknowledging that the town's need for a senior housing development is real and urgent, selectman Ronnie McMorris said seniors could unburden themselves from some of their property tax obligations by filing for tax abatements.

"So few seniors take advantage of the exemptions and deferments they're entitled to," McMorris said. "We've got to get them to file for these things."

Lagrotteria, a former member of the Board of Assessors, said many seniors are embarrassed to admit they're having trouble paying their taxes.

"A lot of people don't want it known that they're filing," he said. "It's a difficult thing for many of them to say they need help."

Exemptions and deferments may ease the burden somewhat, but selectmen and senior housing committee members agreed that some type of senior condominiums or apartments are needed for seniors to see major property tax relief.

By moving into smaller living quarters which better fit their lifestyle, seniors could sell their more expensive homes and pay less in property taxes. Of the 144 respondents to the senior housing survey, 75 percent said their residences were either too large or too expensive to maintain for people on fixed incomes.

Lagrotteria said he is gathering a list of all town-owned land from the assessor's office in an attempt to pinpoint a parcel which may be used to build a senior housing development.

One of the places in town which has been discussed as a possible location for senior housing is the former Osgood school. While the new town library will take up the major portion of the old school, a 7,000 square-foot portion in back is still vacant.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he is planning to put out a Request for Proposals [RFP] this summer to solicit possible uses for the rear of the old Osgood school.

In addition to senior housing, Haddad said he has been contacted by the South Shore Art Center about using the building as well as by advocates of a children's discovery museum. A police station has been discussed for the building as well.

"It seems like everybody is looking at that space," Haddad said.

Still, as the percentage of seniors in town continues to rise well above the state average (23 percent in Cohasset as compared to 17 percent state average), space will have to be found somewhere if seniors are going to stay in town.

Senior housing committee member Dorothy Keville said the committee will meet with town counsel Paul DeRensis in the near future to discuss zoning changes which would allow housing options for seniors such as accessory apartments in or attached to single homes.

Callahan said a possible zoning change which would allow a senior-only development should also be explored.

"Perhaps concentrating on a zoning change for a cluster of senior housing would be a good way to go," he said.

ago and an offer of $35,000 was turned down two years ago.

"The main thing we're concerned about is keeping the land the way it is," Hartshorne said of the approximately 100-yard-long, rocky stretch along the coastline. "From our preliminary investigations, it seems the land really isn't buildable because of the amount of ledge and wetlands issues. Nonetheless, we'd all feel more comfortable if the intent of conserving the land was ensured in perpetuity."

While everyone involved has said they would like the land to be protected from development, the historical society's need for revenue complicates the issue. Though Pratt said she would like to see the land remain with the society, Hovorka said the society's financial situation may necessitate a sale.

The society operates the Caleb Lothrup House on Summer Street as well as the Capt. John Wilson House and the Cohasset Maritime Museum on Elm Street.

"We do need money for our endowment," Hovorka said. "We keep having to dip into that endowment to pay our expenses. Selling the land to the conservation trust would be an option."

According to assessor Cheryl Pooler, the assessed value of the property is $295,700. The disparity between that figure and the most recent offer of $35,000 made to the society by the conservation trust leads Hartshorne to believe community support may be needed to purchase the land.

"We would like to get some participation from interested neighbors or residents to help us buy the property from the historical society," Hartshorne said.

Pratt has had discussions with members of the historical society regarding the property she donated to them more than a half-century ago. She is confident the property will be conserved as her family intended.

"I've told the historical society what I want, and I think it will all be done," she said. "I don't want the property to change in any way."

Hovorka said he intends to adhere to Pratt's wishes, but said the coming years may bring others to the society who have a difference of opinion.

"I'm a big conservationist, and I'd like to see the property remain as it is," he said. "But I'll only be the president for a few more months and I can't speak for future boards."

Write-in winners enjoying new offices

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Neither of them originally intended to run for public office, but new board of health member Peggy Chapman and new recreation commission member Wallace St. John are excited about their new posts.

Both were elected as write-in candidates and decided to run after no one pulled nomination papers for either office.

Chapman, a clinical nurse practitioner who works in Hingham, said she was spurred to run because she wanted to ensure that environmental efforts at Cohasset Heights Landfill would continue.

"It was important to me to follow in [former board of health member] Alix White's footsteps and clean up CHL," she said. "I was very worried that someone who wasn't as concerned about CHL as I was would get on the board and the cleanup would become a lesser priority."

A native of St. Louis, Missouri, Chapman came to Massachusetts in 1980 to attend graduate school at Boston University. She and her husband, John, moved to Woburn in the early 1980s, where she saw firsthand the havoc which could be wrought by environmental contamination.

Woburn was the site of cancer-causing water contamination made famous in the best-selling book and movie "A Civil Action." Chapman and her family moved to Woburn after the water contamination scare had ended, but other contamination was still evident.

"We also had a major SuperFund toxic site," Chapman said. "A lot of the kids had been playing in the contaminated areas. When people found out about the levels of contamination, it was like attending a wake. It was just very depressing."

After moving to Cohasset with her husband and three children, Mark, 15, Cecilia, 12, and Anne, 10, Chapman became aware of another potential health issue which has plagued Cohasset over the years, that of failing septic systems.

Her house on Virginia Lane is to be connected to the town sewer as part of the Central Sewer Project, but Chapman knows well the problems homeowners face when dealing with septic failure.

"I've lived with a failing septic system, so I know what people are going through," she said. "Like a lot of people, we didn't have any land that perked."

Chapman said she is eager to work on the board and hopes her science background proves valuable over her three-year term.

"I think I have a good of understanding of health issues," she said. "I've attended one meeting, and I really like the group."

St. John, who ran as a write-in candidate for the recreation commission, hopes his involvement will clear up a situation regarding town land.

"As the president of the Cohasset Soccer Club, I'm constantly in negotiations about using fields," said St. John, who manufactures flags and lives with his wife, Nancy, and children, Rob, 10, and Emily, 8. "My hope is the recreation commission could provide the communication necessary between all the groups looking to use the few fields we have. There's not one place people can go to find out who's using what fields, when, and at what time."

St. John said he frequently sees situations where one youth team comes to a field for practice only to find another team already there.

With the school renovation project slated to make much of Lilland Field unusable for recreation purposes and a constantly growing youth population in town, St. John said the need for fields will be more crucial in the upcoming years.

"The student population is rapidly growing at the bottom," he said. "We've got 67 teams in the soccer club and a new third and fourth grade lacrosse club as well. We're going to need new methods of communication. I'd like to affect a change in that."

St. John said the recreation commission doesn't have the power it once had with the advent of the Town Manager Act, which he said he fully supports. He said the commission will have to take a lead role in petitioning Town Manager Mark Haddad and selectmen to protect the town's fields.

"With a town manager, everything goes through him, and I think we get a lot more done as a town that way," St. John said. "But, in the past, if the recreation commission wanted something, they'd just go to town meeting and ask for it. Now, we need to convince town officials that it's more important than ever to spend money on the upkeep and maintenance of our fields."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Outfall pipe

To Mr. Mark W. Haddad, Town Manager

At your request and that of Mr. Gary Vanderweil, chairman of the Cohasset Sewer Commission, we offer the following information to provide clarification relative to the impacts of additional effluent flow proposed to be discharged via the new Wastewater Treatment Plant (WWTP) outfall. First, let us state that the outfall has been approved by all applicable federal, state and local regulatory agencies relative to its placement and function. Federal and state regulators required extensive and costly environmental evaluations to be conducted to mitigate any adverse effects of the outfall. The new outfall actually enhances the minimization of environmental impacts to the point where they are less of an impact on aquatic water quality, flora and fauna, than the existing WWTP outfall to James Brook. The WWTP and outfall in the Cove have also been the topic of numerous discussions at public meetings and workshops held by the Sewer Commission and have been subject to considerable public review. In general summary, the new outfall will improve the environment even in light of the additional quantity of effluent flow from the WWTP. It should be stressed that the effluent will be of exceptional quality as a result of the new membrane filtration process being constructed at the WWTP.

To try to quantify the relative insignificance of the proposed outfall, one needs only examine the tidal flushing or tidal flux rate of the Cohasset Cove where the lobster cars are situated. The proposed average daily flow from the expanded WWTP will be 300,000 gallons per day or about 40,000 cubic feet per day. During the course of a single tidal cycle and at average WWTP effluent flow rates, this would equate to about 20,800 cubic feet of treated effluent entering the Cove. The tidal prism for the Cove based upon tide gauges was approximated at 14,500,000 cubic feet. Thus the treated effluent flow from the expanded WWTP would represent only 0.14 percent of the total volume displaced each tide. This equates to a relative dilution of more than 700 to 1 and negligible effects to the average salinity.

The influence of The Gulf's tidal waters also have a significant effect on flow patterns within the Cove tending to further dilute Cove waters and segregating the Inner Cove waters away from the lobster cars on an outgoing tide.

The WWTP outfall is fitted with "duck-bill" diffusers which jet and quickly disperse the effluent flows. Full mixing with Cove water is quickly accomplished with this type of diffuser eliminating any "fresh water shooting along the bottom of the harbor." The ambient temperature gradients between Cove waters and effluent will also promote further mixing throughout the entire water column.

Relative to other aspects of the letter regarding "promises" or "liability" issues, such are beyond the limits of my technical review of the letter. Based upon my current knowledge and understanding of the hydraulics of the outfall and the Cove, there would appear to be no validity to the contention that the new outfall will significantly alter salinity in the Cove. Rainfall, runoff and drainage system flows during storm events have a much greater propensity to impact salinity and increased development in the watershed can further contribute to this. A re-direction of focus on these issues may be more appropriate.

Against Greenbush

To the Editor:

Thank you, Jim Watson, for your intelligent article, "Train would kill 'enchanted villages,' in the March 2 Mariner. We were away in March and I'm just catching up on mail and reading. We have not been involved in town affairs and, for this neglect, I apologize.

We bought our home in Cohasset in the fall of 1970 and moved here from Hingham because we loved the quiet small-town atmosphere. Because we live near the village, the train issue has concerned us. I have asthma and following a diesel truck or standing on a platform when the Amtrak train comes in, makes me cough and can bring on an attack. The clean air here on Little Harbor has been good for me. I can't imagine what the pollution of our air would eventually do to our lungs and, more importantly, to the lungs of our children and, with all the crossings, to the safety of our children. Eventually, the beautiful white homes and churches of our village would turn black from the diesel smoke.

We don't understand why Cohasset needs to attract more people bringing more traffic and noise to complicate our already increasing problems such as torn-up roads due to septic and drainage problems in a town which is basically rock and ledge. (It's difficult to understand the increase in construction which seems to be underway everywhere in a town which already has unsolved issues, but that's another question to consider.) Do we really need a train to add to our tax rate?

Our oldest son, a motion picture film editor living in the L.A. area for 13 years before moving to N.Y.C. to edit, was on his way home for the holidays and told his colleagues he was going home to "Eastwick." The response was, "Oh, you grew up where 'The Witches of Eastwick' was filmed?" It's so beautiful. We thought it was a set designer's concept." Please, let's not change what brought most of us to this town in the first place. A thank you is due to the selectmen (March 16 Mariner) for not accepting the village station concept. Now, we need to erase the entire plan. We have a bus which goes through our town into Boston. We have two boats in nearby towns and a T station within a 20-minute drive. Isn't this enough?

One New England tradition replaces another on 3A

Newport Creamery opens in former Bergson's location

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Those who used to love heading to Bergson's restaurant on Route 3A in Cohasset for inexpensive family meals and ice cream treats are still in luck.

While the name on the sign has changed, Newport Creamery offers customers from Cohasset and nearby Scituate the same kind of simple fare and sinful desserts that made Bergson's a Cohasset landmark for over 40 years.

"We're a family restaurant and we're unique in that we make our own ice cream," said Newport Creamery marketing director Trish Reardon. "We've been in Massachusetts before, but not in that area, so we're very excited about it."

Newport Creamery, which opened in town last week, bought out six Bergson's locations in Massachusetts recently — in Cohasset, Westboro, Milford, Westwood, Needham, and Acton.

The transaction brings the number of Newport Creamery restaurants in New England to 38, which includes two locations in Connecticut, and six existing locations in Massachusetts.

David Drinkwater, president of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce was excited about the chain coming to the town's 3A business district, saying it fills a need for those living in the area.

"For years, Bergson's had been a unique place for the people around there," Drinkwater said. "It was a place where people from Cohasset and Scituate could go for a quick and inexpensive bite to eat. I think it's great that people will still be able to do that at Newport Creamery."

While Newport Creamery is new to Cohasset it is definitely no newcomer in New England. The original Newport Creamery restaurant, which sold only ice cream, was opened in 1940 in Newport, Rhode Island by Mason Rector. Food and sandwiches were added in 1953.

The franchise prospered to eventually include 32 franchises run by the Rector family. The Rectors maintained control of the company until last January, when Peter Rector, Mason's son, sold to Clearwater, Florida developer Robert Swain.

The company's six acquisitions in Massachusetts are the first since Swain bought it last year.

Drinkwater hopes the company's arrival is the first of many new businesses to open on 3A.

"They've just joined as members of the Chamber, which we're excited about," he said. "I think it's great they've come in. It can only help bring more people to the 3A business district."

At 6-2, the Cohasset High baseball team has made its best start since the early 70s.

This past Tuesday, Cohasset pinned down a tough Carver squad 9-4, as sophomore Nick Bolster picked up the complete game victory.

"We are having a great start," said varsity coach Robert Knurek. "And I think we have the potential to play at this pace the rest of the season."

"We are having a great start, and I think we have the potential to play at this pace the rest of the season."

One of the highlights of this early season has been the spectacular pitching of senior Greg O'Keefe. O'Keefe has a 3-0 record with three complete games. Allowing a mere one earned run in 21 innings to a powerful Norton squad en route to a 4-1 victory, O'Keefe has 32 strikeouts with only five walks.

All this not to mention the complete game no-hitter he hurled against South Shore Voc Tech.

O'Keefe has three great pitches to choose from, fastball, curve and change-up, all of which he consistently throws for strikes.

Skippers on the upswing

By Andrew Mahoney
STAFF WRITER

The Cohasset High boys tennis team has made steady progress under third year coach Roger Tait.

Despite the fact the South Shore League looks to be strong once again, the Skippers are aiming high.

"The year before I got here, I think the team went 0-12," said Tait. "My first year we went 3-7, and then last year we were 4-8. We're hoping to make the tournament this year."

To do that, Cohasset needs to have a record of .500 or better. It didn't look promising when the Skippers dropped their first two matches of the year, but Tait felt better after they broke through the win column for the first time against Carver on Tuesday, 4-1.

"This was a good win for them now," said Tait. "I'm pretty optimistic."

Cohasset lost a few seniors to graduation last year, and had some holes to fill this season.

"It's tough when seniors move on," said Tait. "But it's also good because it gives the players coming up a chance to establish themselves. I think everything is coming together nicely."

"We're solid competitors. I think the other teams respect us. We have some talent, and we've got a solid line-up. Teams know not to take us lightly."
Roger Tait

The Skippers opened up with a pair of tough matches, losing to Hanover and Norton.

"Hanover we played tough," said Tait. "Norton was a tough match for us. We came out flat and lost, 4-1. The guys had to rebound from that."

Opponents are starting to look at the Skippers in a different way.

"We're solid competitors," said Tait. "I think the other teams respect us. We have some talent, and we've got a solid line-up. Teams know not to take us lightly."

Leading the way is senior co-captain Brian Tracey at first singles. Chris Golden is the other co-captain at second singles. Junior Heath Heinz is at third singles.

"Those are our three best players," said Tait. "They're our star guys. Our first doubles team is a little inexperienced, but they got their first win, 6-0, 6-0 (against Carver). That will help."

Joe Niessink and Greg O'Connell form the first doubles for the Skippers, and are proving to be fast learners. The second doubles squad of Jeff Scribner and Jeff Garber is perhaps the most consistent of the bunch. The duo is off to a 3-0 start.

Golden was unable to play against Carver, but Ben Bixby filled in admirably and played well.

Part of the reason why Tait is optimistic is in how the players looked at the start of the season.

"We wanted the kids to focus on improving their fitness levels in the off-season, and they have," said Tait. "We wanted to establish a baseline and show improvement. They've also improved their game a lot technically. Their thinking a lot more and executing. Their shotmaking has improved."

Tait likes how the team has been able to overcome obstacles.

"There are some tough teams in this league. We're a small program in a small school," said Tait. "Despite the lack of numbers, we're able to field a really competitive team."

Cohasset entered April vacation with an 0-2 record and no matches scheduled, which can present problems.

"The scheduling can be difficult," said Tait. "You can get into a rut if you're not being tested in a match situation. You have to focus to maintain that competitive level."

There are benefits to the situation.

"It's also an opportunity to work on game strategies," said Tait. "We can improve our fitness level."

As for the rest of the schedule, Cohasset has just one non-league game, so it will have to do well within the league in order to qualify for the tournament.

"There are some dominant teams," said Tait. "There are some programs that are really well-developed like Norwell. Hanover fielded a good team this year. Norton's good. I would say Cohasset is a competitive team with all of them. We can be a contender. They have the ability. They just needed to get their record and confidence up."

Joshua's Run continues to grow

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

What started as a small race to bring awareness to cancer and raise money for the Jimmy Fund has turned into an event that could draw an estimated 300-plus runners and walkers come May 7.

The 4-mile Joshua's Run For The Jimmy Fund gets underway at 1 p.m. at Scituate's Peggotty Beach. A 2-mile Fun Run starts at 11:45 a.m. after the 11:30 start of the Kids Fun Run.

Proceeds from the race will go to the Jimmy Fund. The race is named after 5-year-old Joshua Blacker, who has a rare kidney disease known as Wilm's Tumor. Joshua has undergone two major surgeries and four in all, and is in good spirits.

"He's doing really well," said Esther Blacker, Joshua's mother and the race director.

The inaugural race was a small one, but has since grown into a popular event that has increased in numbers every year. Last year, 270 runners and walkers participated and raised more than $19,000. After the first race, Esther decided to make the race and walk an annual event.

"I figured I may as well make it bigger than that (the first race)," she said.

The race has become a true community event over the years and Esther said it is an example of the good will among the Scituate residents, as well as the Fire, Police and Highway Departments.

"They all kick in and help with this race," she said. "It's a lot of work for them. These departments really deserve a lot of credit for their work."

Sponsors and volunteers for the race are numerous and there are always a number of people on race day who are eager to lend a hand with whatever is needed.

"These people are just amazing to me," Esther said. "So many people come up to me and say they want to help. You can tell their heart is really into it.

"I have a lot of friends and family who come from far away. It really means a lot to me when a lot of people show up."

Sponsors for this year's race include FLIK International, Cubix Software, Capital Analysts of New England, Allen & Gerristen,

Race to aid Worcester firefighters

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

It's reasonable to expect even more firefighters than usual will compete in the Scituate Firefighters Local 1464 Seventh Annual Benefit Road Race & Walk on May 13.

The scenic 5K (3.1 miles) race, which winds through Minot and the Glades Estate, has served as a staple for the Scituate Firefighters Scholarship Fund over the past six years. This year's race will also serve as a benefit for the Worcester Fire Fighters Local 1009 after the city lost six men last December in a horrific warehouse blaze.

The race, which starts at 10 AM, has become a family event over the years, with a 1K kids race and a 2.5-mile walk. The walk at 8:30 AM and the 1K event at 9:15 AM precede the race.

Kingston's John Noland led a solid field of 306 runners last year with a time of 16 minutes, 37 seconds. Holly Madden Wanta found the hometown course to her liking by finishing 12th overall, tops among the women, in 20:16. The kids race attracted 52 competitors.

offensive player, with a solid opposite field double in the win over Carver.

"He has had an unbelievable start," said Knurek. "He has really matured, he's very focused on the field."

Right handed fastball pitcher Bolster and team leader Joe Pergola make up the rest of the starting rotation.

"Nick is probably our fastest pitcher, and Joe is an intense leader on the field. When Joe is on the field, it is all baseball," stated Knurek.

Led by senior captains Pergola and Dan Mulligan and junior captain TJ Bilodeau, the Skippers have a full roster of 12 players that contribute to the success of the club.

"Everybody is important, and everybody plays," said Knurek proudly of his deep team.

At catcher is sophomore Tim Straughn, who packs power into the line-up as well as a strong arm from behind the plate.

First base is taken by the dedicated and talented Pergola, who is often switched with junior lefty Tim Grassey.

Second and third base are tended interchangeably with Bilodeau, sophomore Robin Murphy, and recent junior varsity call-up, sophomore Chris Caron. Completing the infield is Bolster at the shortstop position.

Seniors O'Keefe and Mulligan and junior Doug O'Brien take up the outfield, often playing a different position from the previous game.

Off the bench are two very key players. Junior Casey Brewer has the utility role on the team, and in the young season has already played every position on the field. Junior Andrei Skorupa very consistently collects hits and is repeatedly used as a pinch-hitter in close games.

"We need some mental toughness," said Knurek. "This team has the potential to win every time it steps on the field. And every game for two and a half hours we need to play our best baseball and control our results."

The junior varsity baseball team should prove to be quite solid this year with sophomore pitcher Matt Ogrodnik, who took a shutout into the final inning en route to a 7-2 complete game victory over a powerful Scituate team that had scored 19 runs in its previous game.

There is also a very strong freshman class, including pitchers Terry Baroudi, Trey Curry and Mike Snowdale, catcher/first baseman Matt O'Brien, and outfielder Chris McKenna.

The junior varsity team is coached by Peter Lucido, a former Div. 1 college pitcher at UMass Amherst.

"The South Shore League is very strong this year," declared Knurek. "We just have to show a lot of dedication and play good solid baseball."

Esther said the corporate sponsors not only make financial donations but also have "a bundle of runner" who compete in the race as well.

"The sponsors are really gung ho to help out," Esther said.

As for the race itself, the USA Track and Field and New England sanctioned 4-mile course has a beach view and is moderately challenging. The biggest hill is at the start. There are markers at each mile and three water stops along the scenic course.

"It's a beautiful run, even on a rainy day," Esther said.

Last year's winner, Jim McGaugh of Belmont, is expected back to defend his title this year. McGaugh averaged a swift 5:07 pace per mile to cross the finish line in 20 minutes 29 seconds. Women's winner Peg Holdash ran to a 25:41 finish.

Prizes will be awarded to the top-three overall male and female finishes, and the first male and female finishers in the 40-49 division, 50-59, 60-69 and 70-and-over. Pre-registration fee is $12 if postmarked by May 2.

Entries should be sent to Joshua's Run c/o Esther Blacker, 35 Common St., Scituate, MA. 02066. Checks or money orders should be made out to the Jimmy Fund.

Race-day registration for the race and walk is $15. The Kids Fun Run fee is $5. T-shirts will be on sale at the race for $10 and an award for the most money raised through pledges will be awarded.

SPORTS NOTES

Norwell Visiting Nurse Golf Tourney set for June 5

The Norwell Visiting Nurse Golf Tournament planning committee is pleased to announce the selection of long time Norwell resident and retired banker, Bob Dwyer, as honorary chair of its upcoming fundraiser.

"Bob is such an enthusiastic golfer and loyal supporter," said planning committee member Tina Dwyer (no relation). "We are delighted to have him host this year's event."

Dwyer, well-known in the South Shore business community, has been a member of the Norwell Visiting Nurse Board of Directors for several years, and Chair of the Finance Committee.

The VNA tournament is scheduled for June 5 at the Atlantic Country Club in Plymouth. Last year's inaugural event, hosted by Mount Blue Restaurant in Norwell, raised over $10,000 for the VNA.

Mount Blue Restaurant will sponsor the post tournament dinner and awards ceremony. In addition to golfing, there are plenty of opportunities to help out: hole sponsorship and raffle donations are welcomed.

The Norwell VNA, with offices in Norwell and Scituate, is a non-profit, community-based home health organization which provides quality healthcare to people in their homes. Proceeds from this event will not only enable the VNA to continue to provide quality care, but also to provide the community with pertinent, up-to-date educational and support groups.

Inaugural Cape Cod Women's Golf Championship

Women golfers will be going for the greens as they tee off in the inaugural Cape Cod Women's Golf Championship 2000, a championship tournament for women amateurs and professionals.

The tournament is scheduled for Wednesday and Thursday, June 7 and 8, 2000 at Blue Rock Golf Course, South Yarmouth. Blue Rock is a championship 18-hole par three course rated by Golf Digest Magazine in 1998 as one of the top 5 short golf courses in the United States.

"This championship was started to encourage and promote the sport of women's golf on Cape Cod. It is the first in what we hope will become an annual event for some spirited competition and great fun," said Robert V. Miller, head PGA pro at Blue Rock, and the event organizer.

Nationally, women make up the fastest growing segment of the golf market.

Red Jacket Inns, Citizens Bank, and Sarah Bryson's Women's Clothing are corporate tournament sponsors. A portion of the proceeds to this year's tournament will benefit Silent Spring Institute to fund continued research on women's health, especially breast cancer and the environment.

The 36-hole format is medal play, with a shotgun start each day at 8:30 a.m. Players must check in 30 minutes prior to tee off. Players will be re-paired for second round. The low 36 hole total will receive the Davenport Cup as champions. Ladies' par is 54. Pre-registration is required and limited to the first 100 paid entrants.

Professional cash prizes and amateur merchandise prizes will be awarded. Trophies will be given in each of three divisions: Championship division for LPGA or PGA women members or apprentices and amateurs with handicaps of 10 or less; First Flight division for players with handicaps of 11 or more and Senior division for women.

The entry fee is $100 for each professional player and $80 for each amateur. The entry fee includes: two rounds of golf, two days of practice balls, daily refreshments, and closing awards buffet lunch, prizes, lots of good fun and competition.

Businesses or individuals interested in becoming sponsors should contact Blue Rock Golf Course Pro Shop. For further information and to register, contact Bob Miller, PGA, Blue Rock Golf Course at (508) 398-9295.

Ted O'Rourke Memorial Golf Tournament

The Hanover Lions Club announces that the second annual Ted O'Rourke Memorial Golf Tournament will be held Monday, May 8, at the Country Club of Halifax.

Last year, the full complement of players enjoyed Scottish weather of sun, rain and wind and left the banquet with souvenir coffee mugs. The club honored Ann O'Rourke with a corsage and a framed picture of her husband.

Businesses and individuals are welcome to participate in this community event. The scramble format allows players of all levels to participate and enjoy. The entry fee is $95 per player and limited to the first 144 applicants. Individual players are welcome and will be assigned to teams.

Sponsors are invited either to sponsor a hole for $75 or donate a raffle prize. The sponsor's name will be displayed on the golf course for all to see. A special corporate sponsor package for $425 includes a team of four golfers and a hole sponsorship. Donations for raffle prizes are most welcomed. All donors and sponsors are recognized in the program.

This is one of many Hanover Lions Club activities to raise funds for eye research and other community charities and needs.

For more information, speak to a Lion or call Roy Easton, 826-7984 or Dan Flaherty, 826-5996.

Plans for ACVNA's golf tourney underway

The Affiliated Community Visiting Nurse Association's 7th annual golf tournament is scheduled for Monday, June 26, at the new Waverly Oaks Golf Club in Plymouth, the goal of this year's fundraiser is to raise $100,000 to support the charitable care and community health services of the Affiliated Community Visiting Nurse Association (ACVNA).

In addition to players, the committee is looking for corporate sponsors for the event, along with prizes for the silent auction and raffle, which will be held during the banquet and awards presentation.

According to the committee, the registration fee of $200 per player will include 18 holes of golf with cart, a gift pack, winner's prizes, lunch, on-course refreshments, and a banquet-style dinner.

Spring for the Arts May 9

The Scituate Public Schools will present their 13th Annual Spring for the Arts Celebration from 4 to 8 p.m., Tuesday, May 9.

Carolyn Wachta, department chairperson of Fine Arts K-12 and William B. Richter, coordinator of Music K-12, invite the public to a celebration of student talent in both music and art. This year, Spring for the Arts has been scheduled earlier in the month to accommodate MCAS testing K-12 and the renovation project under way at the high school. The location will remain the same for the music program. Performances will be located on the high school grounds next to the pond area and soccer fields. The art displays will make a shift from the cafeteria space, now used by the Scamps program and recreational department, into the hallways that directly surround the auditorium, business and superintendent offices. If the day turns too cold or rainy for the outdoors, the musical performances will be moved into the auditorium. Scheduled at 15 minute intervals are the following musical performances:

MUSIC SCHEDULE

4 p.m. Hatherly School Band; 4:15 p.m. Hatherly School Chorus; 4:30 p.m. Cushing School Band; 4:45 p.m. Wampatuck School Chorus; 5 p.m. Gates School 6th-Grade Band; 5:15 p.m. Gates School 7th-/8th-Grade Chorus, 5:30 p.m. Scituate High School Concert Band; 5:45 p.m. Cushing School Chorus; 6 p.m. Wampatuck School Band; 6:15 p.m. Scituate High School Jazz Choir; 6:30 p.m. Gates School 7th-/8th-Grade Band; 6:45 p.m. Gates School 6th-Grade Chorus; 7 p.m. Gates School Jazz Band; 7:15 p.m. Scituate High School Chorale/Chorus; 7:30 p.m. Scituate High School Jazz Band.

Students in the music department have been very successful in music festivals throughout this year at the local, district and state levels. These include the Junior and Senior Allstate Music Festivals, the Junior and Senior District Festivals and the Junior and Senior SEMSBA competitions. If the weather cooperates, don't forget to bring a lounge chair and/or blanket to sit on the lawn and enjoy.

Look for the new addition of the Scituate High Student Council "Café" where refreshments of pizza, ice cream and assorted beverages will be available in the consumer science room. Come in, relax and enjoy dinner or a light snack. Ms. DiTommaso, advisor for the student council, feels this will be a wonderful expansion of services to the many families who visit Spring for the Arts.

Senior honors art students, Maggie Beagley, Stefanie Held, Allison Howe, Peter Jardim and Shannon Perry, who are planning careers in art, will be featuring their work during the event. In addition, pieces of work sent to various contests and competitions will also be exhibited. These include The Boston Globe Scholastic Art Competition, the Congressional Art Contest, the Wang Center for the Arts Competition, the Duxbury Art Complex Sculptural Art Competition, and the Superintendent's Art Invitational at Symphony Hall, to name a few. Students throughout the system have done exceptionally well in all of these competitions.

IT'S HAPPENING

Quimper pieces

Fans of Quimper faience — the hand-painted French earthenware fashioned from the clay on the banks of the River Odet near the Britany coast — take notice. From noon to 5 p.m., Saturday, May 6, and Sunday, May 7, Mary Jean Dewire, U.S. representative for Quimper, along with Ann Marie O'Neill, author and expert at antique Quimper, will be at Fleming's, 24 Elm St., Cohasset Village, to help show off the store's expanded Quimper collection.

O'Neill will display for sale many pieces from her antique Quimper collection and will be available for free appraisals and book signing. She is the author of "Quimper Pottery with Price Guide." Fleming's Quimper Celebration Days and trunk show will feature informative discussions on the history and significance of the designs and will also include video presentations of a Quimper factory tour, French wine and cheese, and a raffle for a Quimper faience pitcher at 5 p.m. Sunday (need not be present to win). For more information or directions, call 383-0684.

'Music Man' tickets

The Cohasset Dramatic Club presents "The Music Man," May 6, 12, 13, 19 and 20 at 7:30 p.m.; and May 7, 14, 20 and 21 at 2 p.m. at Cohasset Town Hall.

Tickets are $10. They are available at Front Street Books in Scituate Harbor and Buttonwood Books in Cohasset and Hingham or by phone at 545-5499.

Poetry afternoon

Penn State professor and poet Robin Becker and Hingham poet Elizabeth Torrey will read and sign their books from 2 to 4 p.m., Sunday, April 30, at Buttonwood Books & Toys, Route 3A, Cohasset.

Becker has written five collections of poetry, including "The Horse Fair," "All-American Girl" and "Giacometti's Dog."

Torrey has channeled a lifelong love of language into a writing career. Her first book is "Embarkations."

Free, but reservations are requested. Call 383-2665 for more information.

'Art With a View'

Art lovers and gardeners alike will relish the South Shore Art Center's "Art With a View," an event that includes plein air painting by well-known artists and the works of 20 sculptors at some of the most beautiful estates in New England. The two-day garden tour, a walk-through of eight estates, four each in Cohasset and Hingham, will take place May 19 and 20 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. It will conclude with an auction of the newly painted works and some of the sculptures during a black-tie dinner in an elegant federal townhouse in Hingham May 20.

In Cohasset, sweeping views, tiered lawns stretching to the sea, gazebos and hidden gardens, will tantalize tour goers, as will an ancient rose garden, dating back to the late 1700s. Rock gardens and fieldstone walls on the Gulf River, in company with a giant larch tree and other species of pines, will conjure up mountain images rather than those of the shoreline, with which Cohasset is generally associated.

In Hingham, four historic townhouses, their gardens in full bloom, will offer beautiful landscaping, with arbors, gates, pathways, staircases and ancient stone steps. By their very size, Hingham homes dwarf their surrounding gardens, yet it is the art of shade gardens and what they may produce that ignites interest.

For art fanciers and garden lovers, to observe 20 artists at work within secluded estates, as well as sculpture pieces selected for display during the event provides for an unforgettable day.

Art With a View, garden tours with an artistic twist, begin both days at 10 a.m. and continue throughout the afternoon until 4 p.m. Tickets are $35, $30 in advance and for SSAC members. The dinner auction at 7 p.m. May 20 is $125 per person. Reservations for the dinner party are necessary and are limited to 150 people on a first-come-first-serve basis. Tickets, brochures and maps may be picked up at the South Shore Art Center on either day of the event. Complimentary refreshments will be served at the center from 11:30 a.m. to 2 p.m. both days. Tickets are available at the South Shore Art Center, 119 Ripley Rd., Cohasset, or by calling 781-383- 2787.

Proceeds from Art With a View, the Art Center's major spring fundraising event, will benefit operating expenses of the center, a non-profit organization dependent on contributions for one-third of its operating budget.

Fenway outing

Don't miss the South Shore Community Center's second annual outing to Fenway Park May 24. Tickets for the game, Boston Red Sox vs. Toronto Blue Jays starting at 7:05 p.m., are $25 per person, seniors $20.

Little League teams welcome to attend, must be accompanied by an adult at all times.

Trip includes round trip transportation, hot dog and soda.

Call for details, 383-0088.

Garage dance

There will be a dance for grades 6 to 8, Friday evening, April 28, from 7 to 10 p.m., at the Teen Garage, located at 55 Rear South Main St. (behind Red Lion Inn). There is a $5 per person admission charge and Patrick Carbone will DJ.

Also, any parents who would be willing to help chaperone this dance may call Jack Worley at the recreation office at 383-4109.

Help clean up Straits Pond

The recently-formed Straits Pond Watershed Association (SPWA) will hold a spring cleanup from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m., Saturday, April 29, around Straits Pond, the 92-acre watershed that connects Cohasset, Hull and Hingham. An afternoon cookout is also planned that day from 1 to 3 p.m. at the Gunrock Playground, located across from Straits Pond on Atlantic Avenue in Hull.

The group will meet at 8:45 a.m. at the Gunrock Playground and begin the community cleanup effort for the tri-town area surrounding the pond. (The water level will be lowered to allow volunteers easy access.) Volunteers are asked to bring gloves and encouraged to wear boots and long-sleeved shirts. Plastic bags will be provided by the Hull DPW.

Straits Pond is one of 27 places in the state designated as an Area of Critical Environmental Concern. The SPWA is a new association made up of some 55 residents living near the pond who are working to improve the water quality and help local state and federal agencies with cleanup efforts.

SPWA president Lawry Reid applauded both the Cohasset and Hull departments of public works, most notably Harold Litchfield of Cohasset and Edward Parent of Hull, for their help with the cleanup. The group also praised town managers Phil Lemnios and Mark Haddad of Hull and Cohasset respectively for their environmental concerns and support.

A rain date for the cleanup has been set for Saturday, May 13. Those who would like to volunteer or learn more about the SPWA can call Lawry Reid at 925-8659 or email him at l.reid@viaspeech.com.

Book signing

Brother Victor-Antoine d'Avila-Latourrette will speak and sign his new book "In Celebration of the Seasons: Recipes from a Monastery Kitchen" Sunday, April 30, at 11 a.m. at Glastonbury Abbey Bookstore, 16 Hull Street, Hingham.

For more information, call Glastonbury Abbey Bookstore, 749-2155.

The Designing Woman by Kathleen Fox ASID

GEOMETRY LESSON

Wallpapers featuring contemporary geometric forms, stripes, checks, plaids, and polka dots seem to be perennial favorites, and with good reason. They are often the best choice in terms of decoration and design. For instance, vertical stripes serve the useful purpose of making ceilings seem higher. Moreover, they combine well with prints and patterns to create acceptably interesting mixtures. On the other hand, because plaids help lend a cozy feeling to rooms without significant architectural features, they are often chosen for dens and bedrooms. As traditional as geometrics may seem, they are often called into service to decorate contemporary interiors. This just goes to show that geometrics never go out of style.

This week's column provides helpful tips on how to select wallpaper based on the function of the room. The Designing Woman can take the mystery out of creating beautiful and functional living spaces. We stay current with the latest decorating techniques and share them with clients so that they can consider all their options before making decisions. Our services include creating a thoughtful and individualized design plan and coordinating colors, patterns, and fabrics. Welcome the summer season with newly decorated rooms. Call us at 383-6411 to arrange a consultation.

HINT: Wallpapers that feature bold stripes make effective contemporary statements.

Mitzvah day at Temple

Congregation Sha'aray Shalom, 1112 Main St., Hingham, invites you to celebrate its fourth annual Social Action Day, Sunday, May 7, beginning with bagels, pastry and drinks at 8:30 a.m. and concluding with a community-wide barbecue from 12:30 to 2 p.m.

The event is more faithfully known as Mitzvah Day, because commandments that require us to give our time, money, efforts and talents to benefit our fellow man are fulfilled. Helping others is among the most fundamental of all Jewish virtues. By being involved in the varied activities available that day, everyone gets an opportunity to express Judaism's most profound belief that actions are greater than words.

If your inclination is to physical activity, you can sign up for the Walk for Hunger. Walkers will meet in the Temple parking lot, travel to Boston by bus, walk for about 2.2 miles, and be back in time for the barbecue at 12:30 p.m. If you want to stay closer to home, you can go for a one-mile walk at Wompatuck State Park, where All Paws Rescue has organized a "walk for homeless animals." Folks will also have a chance to do a clean up at area Scituate beaches. Those who want to can help create a blooming garden right at the Temple, or walk over to the Mary Martha Learning Center and help the folks there spruce up for spring. Families can decorate bird feeders to benefit South Shore Habitat for Humanity. Adults can sign up to give blood to the Red Cross. Those who want to can help make meals for Father Bill's Place in Quincy, or visit several senior citizens' homes to help them with house repairs or create wonderful get-well cards for area hospitalized children.

All activities originate at Congregation Sha'aray Shalom, 1112 Main St., Hingham, at 8:30 a.m. For more information or for directions, call 749-8103.

Hingham tour is mix of tradition and history

By Constance Gorfinkle
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

As far as anybody knows, the Hingham Historical Society House Tour is the oldest in the country. An event that — except for a couple of years during World War II — has been held every spring for three quarters of a century, the tour will take place this year June 14, when five antique homes will be open to the public.

The first, unofficial house tour, actually was in 1913, one year before the society itself was formed. The impetus for that was an exhibition of loaned antiques which was held by the Old Colony Chapter of the D.A.R. at the Shute house in South Hingham. Described as a colonial tea, the occasion included a guided tour of the house. Thus, as is reported in "Not All Is Changed, a Life History of Hingham," "the idea of locally sponsored historic house tours had been born."

Today, the Hingham tour draws visitors from all over the region, but "at the beginning it was more local," says Winston Hall, a longtime member of the society who currently sits on the board.

"Back in those days Hingham wasn't a bedroom town," she went on. Rather, its population consisted of those who lived and worked in the town year-round and those who only spent their summers here.

It was "the lovely old houses" owned by the summer folk that the rest of the townspeople flocked to see during the early years of the tour, says Hall, a native of Charleston, S.C., who came to town in 1938, just 14 years after the official tour was instituted. A fundraiser for the Old Ordinary, a one-time tavern built in 1680 and presented to the society in 1922 by Mr. and Mrs. Wilmon Brewer, the tour, from the outset, charged admission and originally included between eight and 12 houses.

Now, an efficiently-run event whose execution by dozens of people takes almost a year, it wasn't always so organized, recalls Hall.

"When I first became involved, in 1971, the House Committee ran itself. For example, I had been teaching school and had (just) retired from it when I was recruited to come on the House Committee. I was simply handed a tour book (from a previous year) and told that I was in charge of it this year. Nobody told me how to do it, and, to tell you the truth, it was very amusing," says Hall, who, with some instruction and a lot of self-teaching, learned how to create a new book simply by "taking last year's book and cutting it up."

With her committee responsible for obtaining ads for the tour book, Hall confesses, "We didn't try very hard; we just tried to cover the cost of the book, and I very proudly made $300 one time."

Information given to visitors about the houses on the early tours also was sketchy. "The write-ups were nothing like what I do today," said Hall. "They didn't have much to do with history. (The women in charge) just went and looked at the house and put in a little about the furnishings." That's a far cry from today's documentation, which is thoroughly researched and provides complete histories of the houses, as well as richly-detailed architectural descriptions.

Notable on this year's house tour are two homes on what is known as "Bachelor's Row," located along lower Main Street, roughly between Old Derby Academy and Water Street. Thus designated probably because the men who built them were squires, that is, landowners of substance, rather than because they were unmarried, the area claims some of the most handsome houses in town.

The two that will be open to visitors are the Josiah Leavitt House, built in 1774, and the Edward Thaxter House, built in 1811. Though erected years apart, both houses have acquired fine colonial revivalist details during their many expansions and improvements. They also harbor in their walls stories that have been passed down through generations of owners. Among the most evocative is the one about the tunnel that ran from the Leavitt House to the Old Ship Meeting House across the street, its purpose to provide safe passage for those who feared attacks from strangers.

Notable on this year's house tour are two homes on what is known as "Bachelor's Row," located along lower Main Street, roughly between Old Derby Academy and Water Street.

Winston Hall, who, in the more than 60 years she has lived in Hingham, has learned most of the town's stories and become familiar with the people who lived them, says that visitors to this year's historical house tour will discover that in its past "Hingham was not a homogenous town, that it had many different people with many different tastes and backgrounds."

In addition to the five homes on the tour, several other sites of historical significance will be open to visitors. Those include two buildings owned by the Historical Society: Old Derby, the site of the oldest coeducational school in the country, and the Old Ordinary, a house museum that has a fine collection of antique artifacts, and will present a special exhibition, "Bevy of Brides," composed of 19th and early 20th-century wedding gowns, during the tour. Other points of interest are the Old Ship Meeting House, the oldest church of continuous worship in the United States; the Memorial Bell Tower, adjacent to the meeting house; St. Paul's Catholic Church in downtown Hingham, which is listed as the oldest house in Hingham because it contains elements of the 1640 Albert Fearing House, and Hingham Cemetery, where many of the town's earliest settlers are buried.

Tickets are $15 in advance and $18 on tour day. They are available in advance at Bowl and Board in Hingham Square and at the Hingham Public Library on Leavitt Street. To order tickets by mail, send a stamped, self-addressed envelope and a check for the number of tickets required to: Hingham Historical Society, P.O. Box 434, Hingham, MA 02043. Please mark the envelope "House Tour." Tickets on the day of the tour will be sold only at the Old Ordinary, 21 Lincoln St., beginning at 10 a.m. At that time, too, tickets purchased in advance can be exchanged for tour books. The tour is from 1 to 8:30 p.m. Light refreshments will be served at one of the houses. No cameras or spike heels are allowed. For more information, call 781-749-2731 or 781-749-0664. The website address is: http://www.hingham-ma.com/Historical/historical.html.

Oprah discovers the Yellow Brick Road

Scituate woman honored for work with battered women

By Alice Coyle
STAFF WRITER

When Jodi Beldotti founded her unique educational program for battered women five years ago she could not possibly have known the Yellow Brick Road would lead her to the set of The Oprah Winfrey Show.

Beldotti and the Yellow Brick Road Project caught Oprah's attention and on Monday, the Scituate woman, who is herself a survivor of an abusive relationship, was the recipient of Oprah's Angel Network's "Use Your Life Award."

"Awards are great, but by far my favorite award is getting a call from a student who says 'I'm doing great.' That's what makes it all worth it to me."

Yellow Brick Road Project founder Jodi Beldotti

Beldotti is the third person to receive the $50,000 cash award earmarked for people who use their lives to improve the lives of others. The award is being funded by veteran actor Paul Newman, founder of Newman's Own, Amazon.com founder Jeff Bezos and donations from Oprah viewers.

Beldotti is hoping the $50,000 cash award and national attention she received this week will pave the way for the program for many years to come.

"I hope this will give the program exposure and lead to more like it," said Beldotti. "I don't see other programs like it out there and they are needed."

For the last five years, Beldotti, who taught professionally for 25 years, has traveled to area shelters offering computer classes to women who have left abusive relationships. The training gives the women essential skills for today's workplace, but Beldotti's lessons incorporate more than Lotus and Microsoft Word. They provide a lasting support network and help build self-esteem — one of the biggest casualties in abusive relationships.

According to Beldotti, the support network and work to restore self-confidence is just as important as teaching the practical skills that make her students marketable in today's workplace. In fact, without those things, women are set up to fail, she said.

"This is much more than a computer class. Without the support, just providing the skills is worse than useless," Beldotti said. Her own experience in an abusive relationship helps Beldotti identify some common challenges battered women face in trying to put their lives back together.

"Some of them can't ask questions. Others can't look up when they speak. Others get angry or confrontational. And they are not conscious of any of these things," Beldotti said. Without knowing how to address the issues and the hurt, Beldotti said battered women sometimes sabotage or undermine themselves when they get back into a work situation. "We help them learn to trust themselves and find ways to address these issues," she said.

"Challenge exercises" and role playing is a big part of the class as is one-on-one attention with her students. "I let them know that I'm there for them beyond being their teacher."

So far 47 women have successfully completed the 10-week program. Each class of 10 students meets three times per week for three hours, Beldotti said. Computer and class work is followed up by 100 hours of unpaid internship work made available by

Variety spices up Music Circus lineup

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

Get ready to jam this summer.

South Shore Music Circus in Cohasset has announced the first half of its summer entertainment lineup, and the list is looking impressive.

Music Circus director of public relations Joyce Linehan said acts in the forefront this summer include two shows by music legend Johnny Mathis, another by country stars Brooks and Dunn, and two performances by The Beach Boys.

Linehan said this summer's entertainment line up is a bit different than last year's.

"We're going a little bit heavier on the country music this year," she said.

She noted this year will mark the first time The Beach Boys have ever played at the Music Circus. Other first-time Music Circus performers include 80s phenomenon Rick Springfield and the harder-edged George Thorogood and the Destroyers.

Peter Frampton, who played Marina Bay last summer is back in the area with a Music Circus date this year. KC & The Sunshine Band is back along

While she was waiting

Local woman pens first novel in her mini-van

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

Claire Cook had some time on her hands while she waited in her Ford Windstar outside her daughter's early morning swim workouts, so she decided to write a book. Her first novel called "Ready To Fall," is due to be released May 1, but is available on some local book shelves already.

Cook, 45, of Scituate, has spent the last 15 years as a physical education/creative writing teacher at the town's Montessori School, but she has always been passionate about her own personal writing.

While writing a novel had always been a dream of hers, Cook said she could never seem to find the time.

Her daughter's swimming practices finally provided that window of opportunity.

"My daughter was doing these early morning workouts," Cook said. "I'd either have to take her to Waltham or Duxbury, and then I'd wait for her outside. One day when I dropped her off I said to myself 'I've always wanted to write a novel, and this is usable time.'"

The next time Cook brought her daughter to her swim workout, she brought a legal pad and a pen and set to work jotting down text on paper.

"I took what I wrote on the pad and transferred it to the computer when I got home," Cook said. In turn, I cranked out the novel in less than six months. We as humans have these crazy blocks of time available to us, but it seems a lot of us never use them properly."

Cook said although she sometimes had to force herself to write during the course of penning "Ready To Fall," it's something she she feels she could do it all over again...and again.

"I feel like I could write a novel a year from now on," Cook said

Cook said the official release day for "Ready To Fall" next week, but those looking for a preview can get a copy at Front Street Books in Scituate Harbor or by pre-ordering on sites like Amazon.com.

Early reviews of the book from publications like "The London Sunday Telegraph," "Publishers Weekly" and "Today's Librarian" indicate the book is destined for success because of its element of humor and unique writing twist.

Cook said what makes "Ready To Fall" unique is the fact that it is written entirely in e-mails.

The main character of the book, Beth Riordan, is going through what Cook labels a mid-life crisis. Her marriage is stale, she is bored with life, and she is fixated on her neighbor named Thomas.

"Ready To Fall" centers on Riordan's e-mails to Thomas, but readers never see any of Thomas' responses. Readers learn of them through Riordan's thoughts and feelings.

"Everything in (Riordan's) life is about someone else," Cook noted. "In a way, this book is about her stamping her foot. Everything in the book is from entirely her perspective. I don't think the book would have worked as well if Thomas' e-mail responses were in there."

Cook says the e-mail format helped sell her book.

"E-mail is just so huge. It opens up a whole new world, and there's really an intimacy to it that you can't get from anything else. I think one of the things that's appealing about the book is that readers feel that they are eavesdropping on someone's e-mail, and that's intriguing to people. It's like being able to read someone

Mustard Vinaigrette

Mustard vinaigrettes fall prey to a host of problems including harsh vinegar, poor quality olive oil, overbearing mustards, and proportions that make the dressing too strong, too oily, or just plain insipid. The good news is that mustard is an excellent emulsifier which makes for a smooth, cohesive dressing, one that holds for hours. The question is, how does one engineer the perfect mustard vinaigrette, varying the formula depending on the assertiveness of the underlying greens?

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

I started off investigating the basic ingredients. Beginning with the oil, I tested everything in my pantry including corn oil, walnut oil, canola oil, and even grapeseed oil. Olive oil was the clear winner although I found the $25-per-bottle brands to be a waste of money for a dressing which is so heavily influenced by mustard. Stick with extra-virgin (never use a "lite" olive oil, which has almost no flavor whatsoever) but don't break the budget.

As I have reported in other columns, most vinegars sold in supermarkets are harsh since their acid level is around 7 percent.. This, I have found, is all the more true of flavored vinegars, which often start with a cheap, harsh product hoping that the rosemary or tarragon will mask its defects. I tried almost 20 different types of vinegar and settled on Alessi White Balsamic Vinegar, which is widely available in better supermarkets and reasonably priced at $4.50 for 12.75 ounces. It has a wonderful balance of sweetness and acidity and is neither watery nor overbearing. Stay away from regular balsamic vinegar, which has too much character for greens. A good second choice is rice wine vinegar, which is relatively low in acidity, about 4 percent.

Mustard also comes in many varieties and I began by eliminating coarse and dry mustards since they produced truly vile vinaigrettes. Any smooth Dijon mustard works well but avoid the fancy variations on the theme such as brown, honey, and horseradish. Just keep it simple.

My starting recipe included 1/4 teaspoon salt, 1 tablespoon vinegar, 4 1/2 tablespoons olive oil, 1/2 teaspoon Dijon mustard, and freshly ground black pepper to taste. I dissolved the salt in the vinegar and then added all other ingredients and whisked until thickened and smooth. (Kosher salt works best here – the crystals dissolve rapidly in the vinegar.) Thinking that the vinegar was a bit subdued, I decreased the olive oil to 4 tablespoons. I then reduced the mustard to 1/4 teaspoon since it was a bit overwhelming. Garlic proved to be too strong but shallots were just right. A small amount of minced fresh herbs was also called for (parsley, marjoram, and basil were all good), adding flavor without too much personality. Finally, I had a great basic dressing for delicate greens such as Boston lettuce or even romaine. Next, I wanted a variation which would be good with more assertive greens such as escarole. Starting with my final recipe, I increased the mustard to 1/2 teaspoon and also replaced the shallots with garlic, making the dressing bolder. This variation is great when the underlying greens need a stronger companion. I also tried using a bit of grated Parmesan or Romano cheese but when used in sufficient quantity to flavor the salad, the emulsion became gummy and the fresh flavor of the cheese was lost. Although I found that the dressing keeps for two or three days in the refrigerator, the herbs need to be added at the last minute or they turn black and lose their fresh taste. However, I also noted that the garlic mellows after several hours of sitting so it is not a bad idea to make this dressing ahead of time, adding the herbs at the last second. The emulsion holds for 8 hours and can be easily reconstituted with a brief whisking.

MUSTARD VINAIGRETTE

There is no need to slowly drip oil into this dressing while whisking. Once the salt is dissolved, just add the remaining ingredients and whisk away! This dressing – without the herbs - can be refrigerated in an airtight container for up to three days. Re-whisk and add the optional herbs immediately before serving. This recipe is best with greens which are not especially assertive.

1/2 teaspoon kosher salt
1 tablespoon white balsamic vinegar
4 tablespoons extra virgin olive oil
1/2 teaspoon Dijon mustard
2 teaspoons finely chopped shallot from one small shallot
Freshly ground black pepper to taste
1/2 teaspoon finely chopped parsley, marjoram, or basil (optional)

In a small bowl combine the salt and vinegar and stir for about 10 seconds to dissolve the salt. Add the oil, mustard, shallot, and pepper and whisk for 15 seconds or until the mixture is smooth, thickened and evenly colored. If using immediately, whisk in the optional herbs.

VARIATION FOR ASSERTIVE GREENS

This version is particularly good on stronger greens such as escarole.

Increase the mustard to 1/2 teaspoon. Substitute 3/4 teaspoon very finely minced garlic for the shallot.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

Most people are already familiar with astrological sun signs — those presumed indicators of personality and future. There are, however, much more telling influences, as anyone who has studied astrology knows.

I try to do something a little different with my astrological forecasts. I like to compare astrology with meteorology. Just as meteorologists predict the physical weather — if there will be sun or precipitation — an astrologer can forecast the mental and emotional weather ahead.

A meteorologist tells you whether to bring an umbrella or sunglasses to work. By charting the course of the heavens and the various effects of celestial spheres on the human condition, I can tell you what type of day we are likely to have and how people are likely to react. My goal is to help you be prepared for the week ahead.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 26

A 90-degree alignment of the sun and Neptune takes center stage today. Allow extra time to get where you are going. People may not be feeling particularly energetic or ambitious; they can be forgetful, distracted, late for appointments. The moon enters freedom-loving Aquarius at 1:42 a.m. and aligns with Neptune at 2:52 p.m. and the sun at 3:30 p.m.

THURSDAY, APRIL 27

This day has its challenges. Take it slow and easy this morning. A lunar alignment to Jupiter warns against overdoing, overreacting, going to extremes. Make up a list of things to do and stick to it, if you plan to be productive. A rough spot is in effect between 1:12-4:12 p.m., when the moon forms a 90-degree alignment to Saturn. Sidestep power struggles, keep it light. Between 4:39-7:39 p.m. a lunar alignment to Uranus may bring up unexpected changes or obstacles. Go with the flow. You can let off some steam this evening by pursuing favorite sports, exercise routines.

FRIDAY, APRIL 28

At 6:44 a.m. the Aquarius moon aligns with Venus and becomes inactive. Mercury and Venus come together at the tail end of Aries at 9:27 a.m. The moon enters the last sign of the zodiac, Pisces, at 1:06 p.m. This is not a day for launching ventures or making major decisions. Instead, plan to follow through on unfinished jobs and tie up loose ends. Imagination and creativity run high; you can make gains developing arts and crafts, artistic projects. Kick back and mellow out completely tonight.

SATURDAY, APRIL 29

The moon continues its travel in poetic Pisces all day. There is one rough spot, however, in effect between 10:37 a.m.-1:37 p.m. Sidestep emotional thunderstorms. Choose your words carefully. Avoid impulsive, compulsive behavior. A lunar alignment to Jupiter at 7:14 p.m. sets the stage for a relaxing evening. The planet Mercury moves into Taurus at 11:53 p.m., remaining there until May 14.

SUNDAY, APRIL 30

A Pisces moon continues to generate a laid-back mood. Take extra time out for yourself; enjoy favorite leisure activities. Create or appreciate art, music, poetry, dance. At 5:13 p.m. the moon aligns with Mars and becomes inactive. A fiery Aries moon takes over at 8:54 p.m. The planet Venus enters Taurus at 10:49 p.m., traveling there until May 25.

MONDAY, MAY 1

The month of May features an extraordinary lineup of planets in the sign Taurus. In addition, three major long-term planetary cycles occur, when Jupiter, Saturn and Uranus align. Plan to make significant changes in your life. An Aries moon sets a fast pace today. Be sure to have a clear plan of action an stick to it. Tackle jobs that need physical exertion; get back on track with exercise programs.

TUESDAY, MAY 2

Plan to start new activities before 8:59 a.m., when the Aries moon aligns with Uranus and becomes inactive. Postpone making important decisions or signing contracts, however. An applying 90-degree alignment of Mercury/Neptune makes it difficult to separate the facts from the wishful thinking. Avoid work projects that require mental precision and attention to detail. Instead, finish old business, handle routine chores and errands. Get extra rest tonight. Pay attention to your dreams.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 3

The stage is set for this month's new moon, when the moon enters Taurus at 12:54 a.m. This is a day to tie up loose ends and clear the way for new beginnings. Lunar alignments to Mercury and Neptune aid imagination and creativity. You may experience breakthroughs and discover new ways to express yourself. Be sure to spend time alone; look within for answers. The planet Mars moves into Gemini at 3:19 p.m., remaining there until June 16.

with Little Feat, Englebert Humperdink, Kenny Rogers, and Trisha Yearwood, whose season opening performance is a sell-out. Other big shows for the 2000 summer season include The Sammy Kaye Orchestra, a performance by comedienne George Carlin.

"We've definitely got some bigger acts on our schedule this year," Linehan said. "And we're moving toward diversifying our line ups more and more each year."

Linehan noted only the first half of this summer's entertainment schedule has been released. A number of additional acts will be announced to the public in mid-May.

"There will be a total of 30 shows this summer," Linehan said.

Members of the Music Circus' Inner Circle Club will get a heads up on the rest of the lineup before the May announcement, Linehan said.

She said being a member of the Inner Circle Club also enables people to have access to event tickets before they go on sale.

Rocker Pat Benatar is one of the acts to be announced, but that's the only one Linehan will reveal at this point.

"We're really excited about how varied our schedule is getting," Linehan added. "We're getting more blues, more dance music, and more acts geared toward senior citizens as well."

Linehan said The Music Circus has a long history of providing good entertainment for everyone.

"The place was started by a group of Cohasset people in 1950. The first show was put on there in 1951. Back in the day, the Music Circus was providing a lot more theater groups and it eventually moved toward musical acts."

Some of the famous faces that have graced the stage of the Music Circus include Don Rickles, Bob Hope, Jimmy Durante, Rich Little, and Sammy Davis Jr.

"Tony Orlando once had a nervous breakdown on our stage," Linehan added. She noted the incident was featured on VH-1's "Behind The Music" series.

"I guess (Orlando) retired for a couple years after that happened," Linehan added.

These days, Linehan said all the great acts are booked by Music Circus general manager Vince Longo, who works hard to bring high quality entertainment to the South Shore.

"He puts in his bids like everyone else," Linehan said. "But the big acts come based on the place's past history and it's good reputation. The people who play here love it."

"Seeing a show here is a close intimate experience," Linehan said. "The way it's set up, no person will ever sit farther than 50 feet from the stage. It also beats hitting traffic on the way into Boston."

For more information on tickets for shows or the Inner Circle Club call the Music Circus at (781) 383-1400.

Oprah discovers the Yellow Brick Road

several local companies over the span of a month. After that there is six more months of monthly follow-up sessions. Through all of this, Beldotti said she forms strong and lasting relationships with her students. Nothing, she said, is more rewarding to her than to see her students succeed.

"Awards are great, but by far my favorite award is getting a call from a student who says 'I'm doing great.' That's what makes it all worth it to me," she said. "It's unbelievably rewarding to see people get through the program and not only start their own lives again, but start their own businesses and begin to give back to those who have helped them."

Students also often tell Beldotti without her program they'd be dead or in jail for killing an abusive partner. "People need to know that this is life or death for many women," she said.

And by helping her students, Beldotti is helping entire families. While she has no children of her own, Beldotti says she is "aunt Jodi" to the 87 children of her 47 students.

"One of the things these women say is that the class has made a difference in their ability to give their kids what they need emotionally."

Beldotti said she loves her work and the Oprah award was just more icing on the cake. Beldotti said she was skeptical at first about the Oprah Winfrey honor. "I thought someone was playing a joke on me," Beldotti said. The Oprah show learned of Beldotti and her program through a previous honor — "The Points of Light Award" — which Yellow Brick Road earned in June 1998. Last May Beldotti received the Small Business Association's "Welfare to Work Small Business Owner of the Year Award."

Beldotti, who taped the show that aired Monday last week, said she was in very good company with others honored with the "Use Your Life Award."

"I was honored to be on the set with the other winners," said Beldotti.

She is hoping to use the money that comes with it to expand her program and possibly pay for additional teachers. While she has a dedicated staff of volunteers, Beldotti is always looking for more qualified help for the project. Last year the program got a local boost when Susan Adams, former owner of the Kind Hearted Woman consignment shop in Scituate made a kind-hearted donation. Adams left her store to Beldotti and now consignment proceeds that come into the Front Street shop directly benefit the Yellow Brick Road Project. In the future, Beldotti said she'd like to have space to set up her own small training facility.

While donations from the business community and local people are deeply appreciated, Beldotti would like to see state and federal support for programs like hers in the form of grant money.

Donations of money and computer hardware and software always needed and welcome, said Beldotti. And she is always looking to recruit more volunteers. "I desperately need someone who might be able to do some grant writing for us," she said.

But in the meantime, Beldotti continues on the path she's found through the Yellow Brick Road Project. It is one that leaves her little time to do some of the other things she enjoys, including ocean kayaking and camping. But that's okay with her.

"I'm happier than I've ever been," she said enthusiastically. "I'm a tool and I've been blessed. People ask me how I can do this work. I say 'how can I not.'"

I dissolved the salt in the vinegar and then added all other ingredients and whisked until thickened and smooth. (Kosher salt works best here – the crystals dissolve rapidly in the vinegar.) Thinking that the vinegar was a bit subdued, I decreased the olive oil to 4 tablespoons. I then reduced the mustard to 1/4 teaspoon since it was a bit overwhelming. Garlic proved to be too strong but shallots were just right. A small amount of minced fresh herbs was also called for (parsley, marjoram, and basil were all good), adding flavor without too much personality. Finally, I had a great basic dressing for delicate greens such as Boston lettuce or even romaine. Next, I wanted a variation which would be good with more assertive greens such as escarole. Starting with my final recipe, I increased the mustard to 1/2 teaspoon and also replaced the shallots with garlic, making the dressing bolder. This variation is great when the underlying greens need a stronger companion. I also tried using a bit of grated Parmesan or Romano cheese but when used in sufficient quantity to flavor the salad, the emulsion became gummy and the fresh flavor of the cheese was lost. Although I found that the dressing keeps for two or three days in the refrigerator, the herbs need to be added at the last minute or they turn black and lose their fresh taste. However, I also noted that the garlic mellows after several hours of sitting so it is not a bad idea to make this dressing ahead of time, adding the herbs at the last second. The emulsion holds for 8 hours and can be easily reconstituted with a brief whisking.

MUSTARD VINAIGRETTE

There is no need to slowly drip oil into this dressing while whisking. Once the salt is dissolved, just add the remaining ingredients and whisk away! This dressing – without the herbs - can be refrigerated in an airtight container for up to three days. Re-whisk and add the optional herbs immediately before serving. This recipe is best with greens which are not especially assertive.

1/2 teaspoon kosher salt
1 tablespoon white balsamic vinegar
4 tablespoons extra virgin olive oil
1/2 teaspoon Dijon mustard
2 teaspoons finely chopped shallot from one small shallot
Freshly ground black pepper to taste
1/2 teaspoon finely chopped parsley, marjoram, or basil (optional)

In a small bowl combine the salt and vinegar and stir for about 10 seconds to dissolve the salt. Add the oil, mustard, shallot, and pepper and whisk for 15 seconds or until the mixture is smooth, thickened and evenly colored. If using immediately, whisk in the optional herbs.

VARIATION FOR ASSERTIVE GREENS

This version is particularly good on stronger greens such as escarole.

Increase the mustard to 1/2 teaspoon. Substitute 3/4 teaspoon very finely minced garlic for the shallot.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

Most people are already familiar with astrological sun signs — those presumed indicators of personality and future. There are, however, much more telling influences, as anyone who has studied astrology knows.

I try to do something a little different with my astrological forecasts. I like to compare astrology with meteorology. Just as meteorologists predict the physical weather — if there will be sun or precipitation — an astrologer can forecast the mental and emotional weather ahead.

A meteorologist tells you whether to bring an umbrella or sunglasses to work. By charting the course of the heavens and the various effects of celestial spheres on the human condition, I can tell you what type of day we are likely to have and how people are likely to react. My goal is to help you be prepared for the week ahead.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 26

A 90-degree alignment of the sun and Neptune takes center stage today. Allow extra time to get where you are going. People may not be feeling particularly energetic or ambitious; they can be forgetful, distracted, late for appointments. The moon enters freedom-loving Aquarius at 1:42 a.m. and aligns with Neptune at 2:52 p.m. and the sun at 3:30 p.m.

THURSDAY, APRIL 27

This day has its challenges. Take it slow and easy this morning. A lunar alignment to Jupiter warns against overdoing, overreacting, going to extremes. Make up a list of things to do and stick to it, if you plan to be productive. A rough spot is in effect between 1:12-4:12 p.m., when the moon forms a 90-degree alignment to Saturn. Sidestep power struggles, keep it light. Between 4:39-7:39 p.m. a lunar alignment to Uranus may bring up unexpected changes or obstacles. Go with the flow. You can let off some steam this evening by pursuing favorite sports, exercise routines.

FRIDAY, APRIL 28

At 6:44 a.m. the Aquarius moon aligns with Venus and becomes inactive. Mercury and Venus come together at the tail end of Aries at 9:27 a.m. The moon enters the last sign of the zodiac, Pisces, at 1:06 p.m. This is not a day for launching ventures or making major decisions. Instead, plan to follow through on unfinished jobs and tie up loose ends. Imagination and creativity run high; you can make gains developing arts and crafts, artistic projects. Kick back and mellow out completely tonight.

SATURDAY, APRIL 29

The moon continues its travel in poetic Pisces all day. There is one rough spot, however, in effect between 10:37 a.m.-1:37 p.m. Sidestep emotional thunderstorms. Choose your words carefully. Avoid impulsive, compulsive behavior. A lunar alignment to Jupiter at 7:14 p.m. sets the stage for a relaxing evening. The planet Mercury moves into Taurus at 11:53 p.m., remaining there until May 14.

SUNDAY, APRIL 30

A Pisces moon continues to generate a laid-back mood. Take extra time out for yourself; enjoy favorite leisure activities. Create or appreciate art, music, poetry, dance. At 5:13 p.m. the moon aligns with Mars and becomes inactive. A fiery Aries moon takes over at 8:54 p.m. The planet Venus enters Taurus at 10:49 p.m., traveling there until May 25.

MONDAY, MAY 1

The month of May features an extraordinary lineup of planets in the sign Taurus. In addition, three major long-term planetary cycles occur, when Jupiter, Saturn and Uranus align. Plan to make significant changes in your life. An Aries moon sets a fast pace today. Be sure to have a clear plan of action an stick to it. Tackle jobs that need physical exertion; get back on track with exercise programs.

TUESDAY, MAY 2

Plan to start new activities before 8:59 a.m., when the Aries moon aligns with Uranus and becomes inactive. Postpone making important decisions or signing contracts, however. An applying 90-degree alignment of Mercury/Neptune makes it difficult to separate the facts from the wishful thinking. Avoid work projects that require mental precision and attention to detail. Instead, finish old business, handle routine chores and errands. Get extra rest tonight. Pay attention to your dreams.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 3

The stage is set for this month's new moon, when the moon enters Taurus at 12:54 a.m. This is a day to tie up loose ends and clear the way for new beginnings. Lunar alignments to Mercury and Neptune aid imagination and creativity. You may experience breakthroughs and discover new ways to express yourself. Be sure to spend time alone; look within for answers. The planet Mars moves into Gemini at 3:19 p.m., remaining there until June 16.

Ah, summer. Could it really be just around the corner?

Believe it nor, it is. These cold, gray days of April in New England fool us into thinking the sun-filled 90-degree weather is more remote than it is.

with Little Feat, Englebert Humperdink, Kenny Rogers, and Trisha Yearwood, whose season opening performance is a sell-out. Other big shows for the 2000 summer season include The Sammy Kaye Orchestra, a performance by comedienne George Carlin.

"We've definitely got some bigger acts on our schedule this year," Linehan said. "And we're moving toward diversifying our line ups more and more each year."

Linehan noted only the first half of this summer's entertainment schedule has been released. A number of additional acts will be announced to the public in mid-May.

"There will be a total of 30 shows this summer," Linehan said.

Members of the Music Circus' Inner Circle Club will get a heads up on the rest of the lineup before the May announcement, Linehan said.

She said being a member of the Inner Circle Club also enables people to have access to event tickets before they go on sale.

Rocker Pat Benatar is one of the acts to be announced, but that's the only one Linehan will reveal at this point.

"We're really excited about how varied our schedule is getting," Linehan added. "We're getting more blues, more dance music, and more acts geared toward senior citizens as well."

Linehan said The Music Circus has a long history of providing good entertainment for everyone.

"The place was started by a group of Cohasset people in 1950. The first show was put on there in 1951. Back in the day, the Music Circus was providing a lot more theater groups and it eventually moved toward musical acts."

Some of the famous faces that have graced the stage of the Music Circus include Don Rickles, Bob Hope, Jimmy Durante, Rich Little, and Sammy Davis Jr.

"Tony Orlando once had a nervous breakdown on our stage," Linehan added. She noted the incident was featured on VH-1's "Behind The Music" series.

"I guess (Orlando) retired for a couple years after that happened," Linehan added.

These days, Linehan said all the great acts are booked by Music Circus general manager Vince Longo, who works hard to bring high quality entertainment to the South Shore.

"He puts in his bids like everyone else," Linehan said. "But the big acts come based on the place's past history and it's good reputation. The people who play here love it."

"Seeing a show here is a close intimate experience," Linehan said. "The way it's set up, no person will ever sit farther than 50 feet from the stage. It also beats hitting traffic on the way into Boston."

For more information on tickets for shows or the Inner Circle Club call the Music Circus at (781) 383-1400.

Oprah discovers the Yellow Brick Road

several local companies over the span of a month. After that there is six more months of monthly follow-up sessions. Through all of this, Beldotti said she forms strong and lasting relationships with her students. Nothing, she said, is more rewarding to her than to see her students succeed.

"Awards are great, but by far my favorite award is getting a call from a student who says 'I'm doing great.' That's what makes it all worth it to me," she said. "It's unbelievably rewarding to see people get through the program and not only start their own lives again, but start their own businesses and begin to give back to those who have helped them."

Students also often tell Beldotti without her program they'd be dead or in jail for killing an abusive partner. "People need to know that this is life or death for many women," she said.

And by helping her students, Beldotti is helping entire families. While she has no children of her own, Beldotti says she is "aunt Jodi" to the 87 children of her 47 students.

"One of the things these women say is that the class has made a difference in their ability to give their kids what they need emotionally."

Beldotti said she loves her work and the Oprah award was just more icing on the cake. Beldotti said she was skeptical at first about the Oprah Winfrey honor. "I thought someone was playing a joke on me," Beldotti said. The Oprah show learned of Beldotti and her program through a previous honor — "The Points of Light Award" — which Yellow Brick Road earned in June 1998. Last May Beldotti received the Small Business Association's "Welfare to Work Small Business Owner of the Year Award."

Beldotti, who taped the show that aired Monday last week, said she was in very good company with others honored with the "Use Your Life Award."

"I was honored to be on the set with the other winners," said Beldotti.

She is hoping to use the money that comes with it to expand her program and possibly pay for additional teachers. While she has a dedicated staff of volunteers, Beldotti is always looking for more qualified help for the project. Last year the program got a local boost when Susan Adams, former owner of the Kind Hearted Woman consignment shop in Scituate made a kind-hearted donation. Adams left her store to Beldotti and now consignment proceeds that come into the Front Street shop directly benefit the Yellow Brick Road Project. In the future, Beldotti said she'd like to have space to set up her own small training facility.

While donations from the business community and local people are deeply appreciated, Beldotti would like to see state and federal support for programs like hers in the form of grant money.

Donations of money and computer hardware and software always needed and welcome, said Beldotti. And she is always looking to recruit more volunteers. "I desperately need someone who might be able to do some grant writing for us," she said.

But in the meantime, Beldotti continues on the path she's found through the Yellow Brick Road Project. It is one that leaves her little time to do some of the other things she enjoys, including ocean kayaking and camping. But that's okay with her.

"I'm happier than I've ever been," she said enthusiastically. "I'm a tool and I've been blessed. People ask me how I can do this work. I say 'how can I not.'"

For more information on the Yellow Brick Road Project call (781) 544-0406.

else's diary. I feel it's fresh ground."

Cook said she is excited the book is faring well even before its release, but she said just actually finishing the book was a triumph in itself.

"I've always wanted to do this," she said. "This is what I went to college for. This is why I wrote for magazines and other things. I'm going to try to enjoy this thing because I worked hard at it. I did my research, sent my stuff out, and eventually got published. Some people think it's not even worth writing a book because they feel they won't get published. But there's hope out there. You just have to write something."

Her advice to others looking to write a book is to stick to it.

"You just have to make yourself sit down and do it," Cook said. "You have to sit down everyday and write something. You can't allow yourself to be perfect and write a polished book on the first try because nobody can. Just stop procrastinating and do it, and eventually, it will become a routine thing."

Cook said she is currently working on a second novel which will focus on "the quirky side of relationships," but she said she's taking her time because she wants to deal with the release of "Ready To Fall" first.

Despite her looming success, Cook has no plans to move out of Scituate. She has deep roots in the town. Many years ago Cook got writing experience with the now defunct Scituate Mirror.

Cook can't say enough good things about her hometown.

"I graduated from Scituate High School, and I still live there now," she said. "I love my life, and I love my job at (The Montessori School). It's just a great place to be. It's inspirational, it's gorgeous, and the people are great."

Cook said she has had a great deal of support from the residents of the town, and from her co-workers. She said she will probably be cutting back in the time she works at the school in order to write. Having summers off will help, she noted.

Cook will be doing a number of book-signings in the area beginning with the Scituate Town Library on April 30 at 2 p.m., Front Street Books on May 7, from 4 - 6 p.m., and at Barnes and Noble in Braintree on May 22, from 7-9 p.m.

For more information on "Ready To Fall" or Cook log onto www.clairecook.com.

Dazzling dogwoods for beauty throughout the year

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

What happened to spring? Mother Nature has deceived us yet again. This fickle temptress teased us with momentary glimpses of springtime during the latter half of March and early April luring unsuspecting homeowners to garden centers prematurely as spring fever spread throughout our area. Gardeners enthusiastically tackled their landscaping chores, welcoming all the glorious sights and sounds of spring, but all momentum has been lost as the season abruptly reversed direction. Relentless wind, rain and dreary weather, reminiscent of late winter, have forced even the most passionate gardeners to temporarily suspend their efforts until drier conditions prevail.

Green

Nature tends to be a perpetual balancing act and this prolonged stretch of soggy, chilly weather is not without benefits. The cool, damp conditions have extended the blossoming of many of our spring ephemerals and perhaps enabled the bloom season, which was exceptionally early, to resume a more typical schedule. Concerns that we might be facing another season of water shortages have been temporarily alleviated as thirsty trees, shrubs and lawns have received a deep, thorough soaking.

There are so many magnificent, blooming trees this spring, including cherries, magnolias and pears, but few rival the grace and year-round beauty of dogwoods. Their unique flowers, elegant fall foliage, colorful fruit and attractive winter silhouettes make them an invaluable asset to any landscape. They are truly a tree for all seasons.

The American flowering dogwood (Cornus florida) is perhaps the loveliest of all ornamental trees. Native to the eastern half of the U.S., it is clothed in spectacular flower clusters of white, pink or red just as the foliage begins to break. The showiest parts of these flowers are actually four, brightly-colored, notched bracts, not petals, with the true, tiny yellow flowers to be found in the center of the cluster. In autumn, small, shiny, brilliant red fruits are borne, but are often quickly devoured by wildlife. When the handsome, deep scarlet to bronze foliage drops, the horizontal branching presents a lovely, distinctive form throughout the dormant months.

Numerous varieties of the American dogwood are commercially available. Flower color may be pink, red or white and several recent introductions boast variegated foliage as an added attraction. 'Cherokee Chief,' 'Cherokee Brave' and 'Cherokee Sunset' are just a few of the more recent cultivars available from your local nursery.

The American dogwood's natural habitat as an understory plant in forests, shaded by larger, hardwood trees, makes it ideally suited to the partially shaded landscape. Well-drained, organic soils are preferred as heavy, poorly drained soils usually lead to their demise. Dogwoods are shallow-rooted trees and the application of a 4- to 6-inch layer of mulch is recommended, especially if the specimen is to be grown in full sun, to help maintain cooler soil temperatures and assist with water retention. Supplemental water should be provided during periods of drought, preferably by means of a soaker hose as wetting the foliage may lead to leaf diseases.

Proper planting and regular maintenance of dogwoods is critical to produce healthy specimens. Plants which are subjected to stress become weakened and are subsequently more susceptible to a variety of pests and diseases. Dogwood anthracnose, in particular, has become a problem in our area in recent years and is characterized by large, purple-bordered leaf spots and brown patches beginning on the tips of the foliage. Prune and destroy the diseased branches and monitor the tree throughout the season, providing a deep soaking once a week during periods of drought. This disease should not be confused with spot anthracnose which appears as tiny spots the size of a pinhead all over the foliage and is promoted by damp weather, particularly in spring as the flowers open. While unsightly, this latter disease does not cause serious damage to the trees.

Another member of the dogwood family, Cornus kousa or the Japanese dogwood, is gaining in popularity due to its resistance to dogwood anthracnose. It is more densely branched and upright in habit than its American counterpart and its blossoms appear three weeks later than the American dogwoods. White flower bracts are more star-like in form and appear on the upper side of the branches once the trees have fully leafed-out. Attractive red fruits which resemble raspberries or cherries appear in autumn and are favored by wildlife during the winter months. Peeling bark on mature specimens reveals lighter patches providing winter interest.

Hybrids known as the 'Stellar' dogwoods have been developed from crossing the American dogwood with the Japanese dogwood. Reportedly vigorous growers and resistant to both pests and diseases, they bloom in late spring and claim to have all the positive attributes of both parents.

As the swelling buds of the American dogwood gradually unfurl, they beckon the sun to come forth and illuminate their distinctive, elegant blossoms. We wish them success and anxiously await their dazzling display.

SOUTH SHORE REAL ESTATE

Realtors® visit Beacon Hill to push for 'smart' growth and consumer protection initiatives

Approximately 20 members of the South Shore Association of Realtors® (SSAR) recently traveled to Boston to participate in the 15th annual "Legislative Day on Beacon Hill" activities sponsored by the Massachusetts Association of Realtors® (MAR).

The local Realtors® met with Senators Michael Morrissey (D-Quincy), Robert Creedon (D-Brockton) and Robert Hedlund (R-Weymouth) and Representatives Robert Nyman (D-Hanover), Kathleen Teahan (D-Whitman), Frank Hynes (D-Marshfield), Vinny DeMacedo (R-Plymouth), Mary Jeanette Murray (R-Cohasset), Thomas O'Brien (D-Kingston), Bruce Ayers (D-First Norfolk District) and Ronald Mariano (D-Quincy) to discuss a number of bills filed in the current legislative session which will impact property owners and the real estate industry. In particular, the South Shore Association of Realtors® members urged local lawmakers to reject the property transfer taxes as a funding mechanism for the proposed Community Preservation Act. The bill, which is intended to provide cities and towns with a new revenue source to finance open space protection, historic property preservation and affordable housing projects, is now before a legislative conference committee and the South Shore Association of Realtors® favors the version of the bill passed by the Massachusetts House as the fairest approach achieving the act's goals.

"It is our belief that the House draft is a win-win option for local residents and those communities that are looking to control their own destinies because it spreads the burden of cost among all property owners through use of a property tax surcharge of up to 3 percent, and also proposed $50 million in matching state funds for local communities. Transfer taxes, on the other hand, which are included as an option in the Senate version of the Community Preservation Act, would be discriminately applied solely on the backs of homebuyers and sellers and, wince they would be payable up front at closing, they are onerous, especially to first-time buyers. We think this new tax will only perpetuate fears over the already high cost of housing in our state," said SSAR president Joyce Baker.

Among other legislative measures addressing growth and future development in the Bay State, local real estate professionals expressed support for a bill that would increase creation of cluster developments and offered general support for provisions in the Sustainable Development Act that would encourage coordinated land-use planning policies across the state, including the creation or upgrade of local master plans. In addition, they outlined their opposition to a proposed "mansionization" bill that would allow communities to prohibit the teardown and replacement of smaller homes with larger homes through the expansion of zoning restrictions under Chapter 40A of the state laws.

"We have serious concerns about provisions in House Bill 1215 that would allow a community to adopt new, unspecified restrictions on bulk and height of building and yard size," stated Baker. "Proposals, like this one, that would allow communities to exceed historical zoning limitations on frontage and setbacks represent an infringement on the individual property rights and may severely limit a homeowner's ability to make maximum use of their property not to mention reduce the property's value."

Separately, on another property rights issue, the Realtors® community is advocating legislation to increase the state's lead paint tax credit from $1,500 per unit to $2,500 per unit. In the past decade, the costs to remove or encapsulate lead-based paint to comply with state law have risen substantially, yet the current $1,500 tax credit has not been changed for more than half a decade. The South Shore Association of Realtors® strongly believes that efforts to make the lead abatement process financially feasible for homeowners and landlords is essential to ensuring the Legislature's goals for the state's lead paint program are achieved.

Finally, an integral proposal on the legislative docket which Realtors® discussed with their legislators, is its Escrow Dispute Resolution initiative. This bill seeks to minimize costly delays and legal fees that consumers and real estate brokers can incur when a deposit dispute arises between a homebuyer and seller. Specifically, the bill clarifies an escrow agent's responsibilities to customers and clients when a sale falls through and both sides demand the deposit. This initiative preserves the rights of homebuyers and sellers to settle their dispute out of court and provide mutual written instruction to the broker or, if they choose, have the matter adjudicated.

At the "Day on the Hill" program, SSAR members, along with more than 200 Realtors® from across the state, heard from a number of public officials in state government, including Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination chairman Charles Walker and Jennifer Davis Carey, director of the Massachusetts Office of Consumer Affairs and Business Regulation.

The local Realtors® who attended the 2000 program were Joyce Baker, Lisa Nickerson, Phyllis Rudnick, Mary Dawson, Frances Lawson, William Frost, Elizabeth Rowe, David Flanagan, Evelyn Tomaszewski, James Malloch, Ann Trettis, Joyce Gerraughty, Patricia Sullivan, Charles Repeta, Faith Chandler, Pamela Godwin, Betsy Trethewey, David Walsh, Richard Coughlin, Richard Lannon and Geralyn Lannon.

You and your home contractor are a team

By Ellen L. Walsh

You envision a new kitchen or bathroom and have determined a price range that you can afford.

Now you want to hire a contractor to help your vision take shape. The success of that will rely greatly on the bond you create with your contractor, but first you have to choose one.

Most homeowners are familiar with someone who had similar work done on their home. Getting referrals is a good way to find a contractor. Ask what they liked and didn't like about the particular contractor to determine if their experience was pleasant and if they got the desired result.

It is best to interview each contractor in person. Ask them about their background and what kind of experience they have. Check to see if they are licensed and insured. Have them provide you with references from satisfied customers. Checking out their references will provide a level of comfort when it becomes your turn.

When describing the job you expect them to perform, make sure you have made as many of the decisions you can before speaking with a potential contractor.

Having drawings, photographs, pictures from a magazine readily available will help convey your vision and make the communication process easier.

You should also feel free to have the contractor offer suggestions. Their expertise and knowledge may save you money by offering alternative suggestions.

You also want to check to see if the contractor will be obtaining all of the necessary permits in order to perform the job. A licensed contractor would know what permits would be necessary and be familiar with the process of obtaining the permits from the town in which you reside.

After meeting with a contractor you would be provided with a bid which should be in writing. It is advisable to get at least three bids. Keeping your budget in mind, it is best to review each bid carefully.

In this case it is not always best to hire the contractor with the lowest bid. Accepting the lowest bid may mean cost overruns or delays in the completion of the work. The bid you receive should be in writing and is usually valid for 30 days.

Once you decide on the contractor you want to hire, make sure you go over all the details you expect to be accomplished to complete the improvement project. It is best to view the relationship as a partnership.

The contractor's job is to complete the work according to the homeowner's specifications and to keep on schedule according to the contract deadlines.

The homeowner's job is to have all the paint colors, flooring, and fixtures picked out ahead of time and to pay the contractor. After the initial down payment it's advisable to pay the contractor on a completion of the project deadline rather than at specified dates. This way you ensure that the work will be completed in a timely manner.

What does that mean exactly? Let's say you are having your kitchen remodeled. You can agree to pay the contractor when he completes all the rough work, when he gets all the appliances and cabinets in, and when he completes all the finish work.

This payment method will also keep your budget in line and will be a strong incentive for the contractor to meet all specified deadlines. Keeping the deadline factor in mind, don't constantly watch or monitor your contractor. It's stressful having your kitchen or bathroom disrupted during the remodeling process, but letting the contractor do his job is going to make the process go smoother for both parties.

You may want to get the exact hours that they will be on the job so that your home and valuables are protected. Having the contractor in the house while you are at work exposes you to a certain risk with regard to your valuables. You also want to make sure that they will be disposing of all construction waste as well as cleaning up after themselves.

If you do discover that something isn't right, bring it up as soon as possible. Misunderstandings can be costly in terms of feelings and your budget. Remember that you have hired the contractor to do the job you asked him to do. Keeping the old partnership rule in mind will allow you to get that new kitchen or bathroom you desired and that the contractor was hired to build.

MainSpring House Charity Open golf tournament set for June 8

It's that time of year again — time to hit the links for a day of fun and excitement at the 16th annual charity golf tournament to benefit Brockton's MainSpring House homeless shelter. Jack Conway and Company Realtors, the tournament sponsor, has announced that this year's fundraiser will be held Thursday, June 8, at the Easton Country Club.

Contributors may sponsor a hole for $250, a tee or a green for $125, a cart for $50, or can donate raffle prizes as a way to participate in the event, said Denis Lilla, Conway's vice president of sales. To participate, golfers donate $90, which includes the cost of the greens fee, golf cart, a luncheon buffet and tournament prizes.

Since 1985, Conway's annual tournament has raised more than $140,000 to help defray operating costs of the shelter.

"We look forward to this event every year," said Lilla, the tournament organizer. "We are proud to be the corporate sponsor of this event, which benefits so many people. Our goal this year is to raise more than $12,000 for MainSpring House."

Founded in 1982, MainSpring House is operated by the Brockton Coalition for the Homeless (BCH) and provides shelter, food, clothing and services such as adult education courses, case management and referrals to individuals and families in need. The Conway House, BCH's facility for homeless families in Middleboro, was named in honor of Jack and Patti Conway to recognize their support of the organization.

Registration for the MainSpring House Charity Open begins at 7:30 a.m., and play opens at 8 a.m. with a shotgun start. To participate, sponsor a green, tee, or cart, or to make a charitable donation, call Denis Lilla, (781) 871-0080, ext. 327.

Founded in 1957, Norwell-based Jack Conway and Company is the largest independently owned real estate company in Massachusetts, with more than 600 agents in 36 offices from Boston to Cape Cod.

Tedeschi Realty announces recent transactions and first-phase construction

John W. Whalen Jr., director of leasing for Tedeschi Realty Corporation in Rockland, announced Dover Rug Company of Wellesley has signed a multi-year lease for a new 1,400 square foot store to be located at the Tedeschi owned and managed La-Z-Boy Plaza in Hanover.

Dover Rug Company, a prominent family-owned and operated Oriental rug company that dates back three generations, is multifaceted in its approach to the business. The company is a manufacturer, importer, wholesaler, and retailer of fine hand-knotted Oriental rugs. Dover Rug manufactures rugs in Pakistan, India and Nepal and imports Orientals from Egypt and China. In addition to its retail locations in Wellesley and now Hanover, the company supplies its product to other retailers nationally. The Wellesley retail store on Route 9 has been open for nearly 20 years.

Dover Rug Company joins such distinguished names in retailing as La-Z-Boy Furniture Gallery, Pella Windows, Elizabeth Grady and Hanlon Shoe at the Hanover plaza. According to company president, Mahmud Jafri, "The new Hanover store location is ideal for Dover Rug Company in that it is perhaps the most convenient and sought after location on the South Shore for a home furnishings company. It is convenient and easily accessible for area residents as it is less than one-half mile from Route 3 and the Hanover Mall. Most importantly, the blend of retailers at the center should prove to be very favorable for both our clientele and for us. Tedeschi Realty has been an excellent partner in the pre-opening process and we look forward to a long rewarding relationship with them."

Whalen also announced the recent opening of Habilitation Assistance Corporation's newest Access Center at Tedeschi's Mayflower Business Park in Plymouth. Habilitation Assistance Corp. has signed a multi-year lease for the 11,117 square foot space at the Tedeschi owned and managed business center.

Habilitation Assistance Corp., founded in 1984, is a private organization dedicated to integrating handicapped and developmentally disabled adults into the community. Habilitation Assistance is accredited nationally by CARE, the Rehabilitation Accreditation Commission, which is the preeminent, nationally recognized certification body for the rehabilitation field. Habilitation Assistance operates four Access Centers in Southeastern Massachusetts, Braintree, Hyannis, Pocasset, and now, Plymouth. The centers provide long- and short-term services to each member and his or her family based on the individual participants needs. A combined staff of 180 professionals offers interdisciplinary support in health care, occupational therapy, physical therapy, speech/language therapy and training as needed, to more than 200 participants daily.

The Plymouth Habilitation Assistance Access Center has a full staff of 27 licensed professionals who implement individualized habilitation programs for members with various disabilities that include mental retardation, cerebral palsy and brain injury, amongst others. These programs include distinct combinations of the following services: health care, clinical, day habilitation, home care assistance, supported living, case management and transportation. The programs and services of Habilitation Assistance are designed to provide enhanced lifestyle options and quality of life while increasing independence for its members and their families. The Plymouth Access Center is open from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m., Monday through Friday.

Tedeschi Realty Corporation's Construction Division of Rockland has completed the first-phase construction of Enterprise Place, a mixed-use facility on Route 3A in Duxbury for property owner Doran Realty Trust. The construction of the new 7,600 square foot, two-story building included the build-out of first floor office space, now occupied by Francis Doran Insurance Agency, and residential apartments on the second floor. The apartments are also fully leased.

In addition to serving as general contractor, Tedeschi Realty handled site work for the project. Peter Dimeo Associates of Stoneham was the project's architectural firm. Total construction cost for this phase of the facility was approximately $750,000. Tedeschi Realty has also been awarded the second phase of construction, which will consist of a new, adjacent 6,000 square foot building.

The seven-month construction process, including the build-out of the new offices of Francis Doran Insurance Agency, was completed in the fall, as planned. The company offices were formerly located on Railroad Avenue in Duxbury and the new office construction was necessitated to accommodate growth. According to owner Fran Doran, "Tedeschi's experience and proficient construction enabled us to have no loss of productivity during the build-out. We are new to the construction process and Tedeschi Realty ensured the project went smoothly and without delay." He added, "The building looks great, both inside and out." Francis Doran Insurance Agency has 10 employees working in its new Enterprise Place offices.

Be clear and concise in your will

By Anthony Summers

As far back as 700 B.C., it was the philosopher Hesiod who verbalized a truth that holds fast today, namely that: "Right timing is in all things the most important factor."

The critical importance of timing was the element that tipped the scale in the Appeals Court Case of Jane Kelley v. Donald B. Neilson.

Background

On Jan. 5, 1993 Aileen Neilson executed a will which contained a provision devising the real estate at 18-20 Laurel Avenue, Waltham, to her granddaughter, Jane Kelley.

On Nov. 28, 1995, Aileen Neilson signed a purchase and sale agreement providing for the sale of the property to Bonnie Nielson, another granddaughter. The closing was supposed to take place on Jan.16, 1996.

On Nov. 30, 1995, Aileen executed a deed to Bonnie, as well as special power of attorney, authorizing David Mitchell (Aileen's attorney) to perform the necessary acts to complete the sale. The deed was held in escrow by David Mitchell.

The closing could not take place on Jan. 16, 1996, so David Mitchell signed a written extension to Jan. 30, 1996.

On Jan. 26, 1996, Aileen passed away, thus terminating David Mitchell's power of attorney.

The closing date was extended several times, with the sale finally transacting on May 17,1996. A second deed was executed by Donald Neilson, executor under the will, pursuant to a power of sale contained in the will.

As you might well imagine, Jane was disturbed to watch her promised ownership of the property go up in smoke with the sale to Bonnie. When Jane requested the proceeds of the sale, Donald Nielson (possibly related to Bonnie) refused, so Jane brought suit to recover her inheritance.

Discussion

"It is settled law in Massachusetts that if the testatrix (Aileen) during her lifetime, disposes of the subject of a specific legacy or devise (the property) in her will, the legacy or devise is…adeemed…" Adeemed is defined as extinguished. Therefore, the question of law for the court to decide is "Whether the property bequeathed to Jane Kelley was in existence and owned by the Testatrix (Aileen) at the time of her death." Even though a purchase and sale agreement was executed prior to Aileen's death, ownership and title remain with Aileen until the deed is delivered and the agreed price, paid. Until the closing, the buyer only possesses the rights (if any) pursuant to the purchase and sales agreement.

Decision

In this case the conveyance of the property did not take place until May 17, 1996, almost four months after Aileen's death. Clearly at the time of her death, Aileen was still the owner of record of the property. Therefore, the devise to Jane was not adeemed and consequently, Jane was entitled to the proceeds of the sale of the property.

Legal advice: The rule that a specific bequest is not adeemed if it is owned by the deceased at the time of death has been law in Massachusetts for more than 160 years. This rule as rooted in the need to follow the intention of the deceased who having bequeathed property in the will, obviously intended the property to pass pursuant to the will, otherwise the deceased would have disposed of the property prior to death.

Be clear and concise in your will, as it is custom and practice to strictly uphold the provisions of a will. An ambiguous provision may very well end up in litigation. For as we have learned, where there is a will, there are always relatives, and where there are relatives, there may very well be trouble.

As you can see in this case, timing was everything. If the property had closed on the original date, (Jan. 16, 1996) the devise to Jane would have been adeemed, and she would not have received anything.

The delay in closing to a date after Aileen's death triggered the application of the law which prevented the devise to Jane from being adeemed, because a devise of property still owned by the deceased at the time of death still will pass to the intended heir. Therefore, since the property was sold, and no longer part of the estate, Jane is entitled to the proceeds of the sale of the property.

Brudnoy AT THE MOVIES

Gossip (C-)

A common movieland fault is letting the story fly out of control midway through what might otherwise be at least of passing interest. "The Skulls," you'll remember, if your memory carries you back about a month, and which starred "Dawson's Creek's" Joshua Jackson, began as a fictionalized expose of Yale's secret society Skull and Bones, and then flew off into paranoia-ville and self-destructed, as so many of Hollywood's recent movies tend to do. "Gossip," which has Jackson in a co-starring role - all of the "Dawson's Creek" hotties were busy over the summer while their series was on hiatus - goes the same unfortunate route, beginning with a solid enough premise and then catapulting to self-destruction.

"Gossip" is based on the well-known phenomenon of the transformation of a bit of information (or misinformation) into something rather more sinister (or ridiculous) as it passes from person to person. Here we have our stars, three collegians, undertaking a kind of informal class exercise, inspired, inadvertently, by their cynical, oh-so-hip professor (Eric Bogosian) pontificating about something or other. They pass along the rumor that the campus virgin queen, Naomi (Kate Hudson), has not only been accompanied by a boy, Beau (Jackson), at a party, but has actually had sex with him. The story, we are to think, would be of such interest in one of those Hollywood-imagined campuses of today, that the modelish students would care enough to spread the story far and wide. By the time the story has reached its peak of saturation, Beau, it is said, has raped Naomi, who was passed out, and she, now thinking that she has in fact been raped, presses charges. Not a bad beginning.

But then things go kaplooey. Our gossip-mongers are Derrick (James Marsden, seen almost always in adoring close-up), who is rich and has a fabulous loft, and his roommates, lovely Cathy (Lena Headey) and impecunious Travis (Norman Reedus), whom we know to be an artiste because he always wears a scarf across his shoulders, and who, although dirt-poor, has enough video equipment to rival Tweeter's. As in "The Skulls," one of the ways this movie goes off-track is that things begin to heat up, characters miraculously appear in just the right places, unexpected but apt, so that they can propel the plot further into its ridiculousness. And it is thoughtless in details, as when Cathy, wanting to find out a little bit more about her dreamy roommate Derrick, takes a taxi all the way from New York to Danbury, Connecticut, to look him up in his high school year book. Cathy, you'll recall, is living as a rent-free roommate with Derrick and Travis (don't you just love the names?), presumably because she doesn't have any money. Take a taxi, Cathy. You go, girl.

Date rape is a fair topic for the cinema, as are the doleful effects of spreading rumors. "Gossip" cheapens both topics by compounding implausibilities until the whole thing collapses into out-of-control idiocy. But all the leads are beautiful. Pass it on ...

U-571 (B)

In 1941, a British destroyer crew accidentally discovered on a disabled German submarine a typewriter-like device that turned out to be the Enigma machine, which provided coded messages permitting Germans to cut off British water supply lines. The code was ultimately broken, by mathematician Alan Turning, who, thereby, saved countless lives and hastened the end of the war. Moralistic witch-hunting ultimately destroyed Turning, a homosexual, despite his key role in winning the war. This is a terrific story.

Unfortunately, "U-571" is not that story. It shifts the action to 1942, when the U.S. had entered the war - the real discovery of the Enigma machine occurred before American entry - and gives the glory to the Yanks, who, not until 1944 had even the slightest role in decoding the Enigma material. It is as if a French movie had credited France with A-bombing Hiroshima; that might be a captivating film, but it would be as fraudulent as this one.

That said, "U-571" has its virtues, mainly the sort you would expect in a snazzily budgeted American big blast film: excellent special effects and that remarkable sense of claustrophobia that a good submarine film - the best is the German "Das Boot" - must have to be persuasive. Here the story is transformed to involve a disabled U-boat that the Americans enter, capturing the Enigma machine, only to see the sub that has brought them to their mission destroyed. This leaves the Americans on a German vessel, unable to inform anybody of their plight less the Germans, intercepting the message, realize that the Enigma machine has been captured, which would, of course, have caused them to alter their codes. So the Americans have to manage to keep themselves from being destroyed by German craft, which will realize that something's wrong, or by Allied craft, which will assume that a German U-boat is, obviously, crewed by Germans.

Naturally the good guys win, as win they must. The story dwells then on the characters, primarily Lt. Andy Tyler (Matthew McConaughey, shorn of his golden locks and his corn pone accent), his chief (Harvey Keitel) and a largely interchangeably attractive group of baby seamen (including a person named Jon Bon Jovi, who I gather makes music of some sort), all of whom exchange wide-eyed glances of terror and steel-jawed poses of resolution. They manage though ingenuity to carry on their unexpected mission, which is to survive in a boat that's not their own. But because almost everybody looks more or less like everybody else, uniqueness of character hardly emerges, save for McConaughey, his commander (Bill Paxton), who dies early on, and a black steward (T.C. Carson) who, needless to say, doesn't look like everybody else. The movie is good old-fashioned rah-rah bombast and is noisy enough to entertain a disco club's patrons.

Great deal on the QE2

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

Q. My wife and I have always wanted to take a cruise trans-Atlantic on the QE2. What's the cheapest way to do this? Do they still have stand-by fares?

A. Unfortunately, Cunard no longer offers stand-by fares, which were a great deal. But you can get almost the same price (under $1,000) with their Millennium Year Transatlantic Guarantee Rates starting at $995 per person, double occupancy for an inside cabin. This fare includes round-trip air, and is available on selected six-, seven-, or 10-day crossings from May 10 through Oct. 27. Departures are from New York, Boston, or Miami.

More information is available by visiting Cunard's Web site at www.cunard.com or by calling (800) 7-CUNARD or your travel planner.

Q. We've always wanted to visit the Maldives ever since friends of ours came back from a trip there and raved about how unspoiled these islands are. Where can we find the best deal?

A. The Maldives, one of the few untouched places left on Earth, stretch from the southwestern tip of India all the way to the equator. Visitors can enjoy scuba diving, snorkeling, and sailing, among other activities.

Through December 2000, Singapore Airlines and Adore Travel Inc. are offering an eight-day package starting at $1,999 per person double occupancy, with departures from Los Angeles. Departures from New York are just $100 more, and add-ons from other cities are available. This rate includes seven nights at the Velidhu Island resort, round-trip air, seaplane transfers, and even daily breakfast and dinner, so it's indeed a bargain.

For reservations, call your travel agent or Adore Travel at (800) 236-7322.

Q. We'd like to take our grandchildren on a vacation to someplace warm and inexpensive, and were thinking of Mexico. Can you recommend a good deal?

A. Presidente Inter-Continental Hotels and Resorts in Mexico offers a "55 for $55" program through Dec. 17, 2000, for travelers 55 and above. Rates are $55 per person per night, based on double occupancy, with savings of 45 percent to 60 percent off standard room rates. This deal is available at all Presidente properties including those in Cancun, Cozumel Mexico City, Guadalajara and all-inclusives in Puerto Vallarta, Los Cabos and Ixtapa.

Grandchildren benefit as well at the all-inclusive resorts, which offer the best deal, since up to two kids under 12 stay free when sharing an adult's room (there's a $25 per child, per day meal charge for kids 6-12, although those up to 6 years old eat and stay free). Children under 18 stay free at Cancun and Cozumel.

Chiqui Clubs, Presidente's children's program, provide supervised sessions offering a wide range of activities, from basic Spanish lessons to hunting for iguanas to classes in cooking and crafts. Rates are subject to availability. For reservations, call (800) 327-0200.

Q. I'd like to find a New York City hotel that has a day spa. What do you recommend?

A. New York's Peninsula Hotel is probably your best bet. The hotel features a three-story, 35,000-square-foot spa/fitness center that's an oasis in the middle of Manhattan. Spa services include facial and body treatments, and a full range of massage therapies, along with daily classes in aerobics, yoga, dance, cardio-boxing and step.

For reservations and more information, call (800) 262-9467 or the hotel directly at (212) 956-2888.

Train advisory group to get back on track

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The state-appointed Greenbush Citizens Advisory Committee — that was established to comment on the MBTA's environmental feasibility study for the train and has not met in more than two years — could reconvene next month.

CAC chairman Terry Fancher said the MBTA is in the process of sending letters to members — who represent Braintree, Weymouth, Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate — to see if they are still interested in serving. The 24-member committee also includes regional representatives from neighborhood, business and civic groups.

"We will pick up where we left off," said Fancher, pointing out that there would be a lot of new information to review. For example, the list of historic sites in the Greenbush corridor has grown from 380 sites on 44 pages to three times that many sites and hundreds of pages, he said.

Scituate selectman Joseph Norton, a former CAC chairman, said last week that it is time for the group to be reactivated.

"We were formed to advise the state and the T on this project," Norton said. "I think it's very important that this committee be brought together again."

Now expected to cost close to $400 million, the 17.7-mile Greenbush rail line is the third spur of the Old Colony Railroad project. The Plymouth and Middleboro lines began service in Sept. 1997. The Greenbush line, due to the extensive environmental review process, is not expected to be up and running until 2003. The MBTA plans to end the line in Scituate's Greenbush area with a 1000-car parking lot, rail station and layover facility.

Members of the committee are appointed by state Secretary of Environmental Affairs Robert Durand, who would have to advertise for replacements, Fancher said.

Senior housing door opens

Board's oversight may grant variance

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

A missed filing deadline may have given the green light to the town's first senior housing project.

The zoning board of appeals missed the April 28 deadline to file its decision rejecting a variance sought by developer Noel Collins for five units of senior housing at the old Edison site off North Main Street.

On variances the 100-day clock starts ticking when the applicant files an application with the town clerk.

Collins told the board Monday that by law, he automatically gets the variance because the time had lapsed.

A clearly angry zoning board held back on issuing its decision Monday to determine if a special permit was appropriate. Collins had asked for two kinds of relief — a variance for five units or a special permit for six that would require the purchase of more land at the site. The clock has not run out on the special permit request.

"I'd like to rethink the decision I drafted," chairman Woody Chittick said.

He said there is some breathing room with the special permit and the board may decide that the variance is not needed.

The level of zoning relief under a special permit is less burdensome than with a variance.

In a telephone interview Tuesday, Collins said the project was essentially approved last Friday when the clock ran out. However, he didn't think the zoning board would "just roll over."

"What this probably means is litigation," he said.

Although Collins said he hoped to be able to sort the matter out with the zoning board.

"As a gesture of good faith, we've decided to put deed restrictions in perpetuity on the units so they can only be sold to people 55 years of age and older," Collins said. Previously he had offered to keep the restrictions only for the first six months of marketing.

He needs a variance because the

Glenn Pratt plots cemetery expansion

Board concerned about density

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

When it comes to cemeteries, Glenn Pratt of King Street doesn't give up.

The long-time cemetery committee member has worked to find a solution to the grave shortage in town for the better part of 15 years.

Past proposals for cemeteries off Pleasant Street and Red Fox Lane met with stiff opposition from abutters and were subsequently abandoned.

But the latest plan to expand Woodside Cemetery to an area abutting Rte. 3A — which was presented to the zoning board of appeals Monday — may be the answer.

The expansion involves installing 600 graves on two acres that would be accessed through a new roadway from the existing Woodside Cemetery. The road, which has conservation commission approval, would traverse a wetlands area, so some land at the site would be used to replicate the filled-in wetlands.

Cemeteries are allowed in all zoning districts by special permit.

Pratt said walls installed for columbaries — which are vaults for ashes — could accommodate 800 urns.

> "Could there be less density with more permeable soil and more trees?"
> — Jane Goedecke, zoning board

He explained that all the burial vaults would be installed during construction because the area would be tightly packed with graves. Vaults are placed four feet down and are covered with six inches of topsoil.

Part of the expansion is also in the town flood plain and almost all is in the watershed protection district, said John Monahan of Perkins Engineering, consultants for the project.

SPED director resigns

Lynn Silva, director of student services, resigned recently to take a similar position in Portland, Maine. Silva oversaw the special education program in Cohasset schools.

Supt. Dr. Edward Malvey announced Silva's resignation at the school committee meeting two weeks ago. He said a number of director of special education positions are available throughout the state, making it unlikely a replacement will be found quickly.

Malvey said the position is being advertised and added he has started to receive applications.

"We'd like to get this position filled sooner rather than later," he said. "Until then, myself, the school administrators, and the special education staff will be helping each other out."

METCO support

School committee members reiterated their strong commitment to the METCO at a recent meeting. They said attempts to increase state funding for the program are ongoing. Cohasset has about 50 METCO students.

The program has been assailed by some as too costly for suburban school districts, many of which incur deficits to bring Boston students to their towns.

"METCO is under attack right now," said school committee member Stephanie Noble. "The funding is up in the air."

Legislation on Beacon Hill could increase per-pupil reimbursement from $3,000 to $5,500.

Supt. Edward Malvey, who is on a board of fellow superintendents lobbying for funding increases, said most of his work the last few months has been spent trying to protect the program.

"We've got a long, historical commitment to METCO, and I certainly will continue to support it," he said.

New principal search committee

At last Thursday's school committee meeting, superintendent Edward Malvey said a search committee will be convened to find a successor to middle-high school principal Curtis Collins.

"If people out there are interested in being on the committee, submit your names to my office (383-6111) or to any of the school committee members," Malvey said.

Malvey said the position would be advertised immediately, but said interviewing can be done throughout the summer because Collins has agreed to stay on through September.

"Once the group is convened, initial interviews will be done confidentially," Malvey said. "After that, finalists will come before the school committee and the search committee."

School committee member Mark DeGiacomo urged anyone interested in the future of education in Cohasset to join the search committee for a new middle-high school principal.

"This is the second most important position in our schools," DeGiacomo said. "It would be nice to get people to come forward, especially those who haven't been involved before."

Officer commended

Cohasset police officer Garrett Hunt received a letter of commendation recently from Sergeant Robert Jackson for his efforts in apprehending a burglary suspect in March.

Hunt arrested Shawn Patrick Connolly, 31, of East Bridgewater, in the early hours that Saturday morning after following his footsteps in the snow after a break-in at Village Wine & Spirits on South Main Street.

"Your devotion to duty, attention to detail, and cool judgment of action resulted in the apprehension of the subject without injury to the subject himself, no injury to any other law enforcement personnel present," Jackson wrote.

Board reorganizes

The newly-elected 2000 school committee had its first meeting last Thursday, triggering the annual reorganization of the board.

New members Rick Flynn and Chartis Tebbetts were welcomed, while former chairman Mark DeGiacomo was named treasurer. Second-year member Stephanie Noble was named vice-chairman, while Pat Martin was selected as chairman.

Martin thanked DeGiacomo for his work in leading the committee through the approval process for the school building process and said the town's support of education bodes well for the future.

"I believe the committee is moving in a positive direction with the support of the school project and technology," Martin said. "I would like to publicly thank Mark, who led both the committee and the community with style, leadership, and grace."

Late METCO bus

School committee member Stephanie Noble announced last Thursday that the town's PSO has agreed to fund a late METCO bus for the rest of the school year.

The bus will transport students to Boston three nights a week at a cost of $67.50 per night.

"I'd like to thank the PSO," Noble said. "It is incumbent on all of us on the school committee to make sure transportation for METCO students is an inherent part of the program."

School committee chairman Pat Martin said the lack of available funding for late METCO transportation is an unfortunate fiscal reality.

"Each of us has a few things we truly feel bad about not being able to fund," Martin said. "I'm sure this is on everybody's list."

Noble said the committee ought to contribute some funding toward a late METCO bus in next year's school budget.

"I see it being a joint effort between the school committee, the PSO, and other interested parties," she said. "I'd like to see us put at least a small amount of money into it to show we're truly behind the METCO program."

Payment period

Selectman Merle Brown thinks the town should look into extending the length of time to repay the state for the recently-approved school renovation projects from 20 to 30 years.

The interest and principal on bonds raised to pay for school building projects are only reimbursed up to 20 years by the state. Brown would like to see the length of time taxpayers have to pay for the project be extended.

"$41 million is a whole lot of money," he said. "I think it would help everyone to extend it out."

Superintendent Edward Malvey said extending the length of time to pay for the project would be a great idea if possible.

"I don't think we'd disagree if the mechanism were in place," he said. "Right now, they're only going to reimburse for 20 years through the SBA [School Building Assistance Bureau]. But if there's some way around it, why not?"

School committee member Rick Flynn said the number of years needed to pay for the project will most likely have to equate with the number of years the state will commit to reimburse.

"The bond counsel would probably want you to match the length of the payment with the length of the reimbursement," Flynn said.

Flynn said he would be happy to work with Malvey, Brown, Town Accountant Mike Buckley, and Town Manager Mark Haddad on the possibility of extending the length of the payments.

Payment period

Selectman Merle Brown thinks the town should look into extending the length of time to repay the state for the recently-approved school renovation projects from 20 to 30 years.

The interest and principal on bonds raised to pay for school building projects are only reimbursed up to 20 years by the state. Brown would like to see the length of time taxpayers have to pay for the project be extended.

"$41 million is a whole lot of money," he said. "I think it would help everyone to extend it out."

Superintendent Edward Malvey said extending the length of time to pay for the project would be a great idea if possible.

"I don't think we'd disagree if the mechanism were in place," he said. "Right now, they're only going to reimburse for 20 years through the SBA [School Building Assistance Bureau]. But if there's some way around it, why not?"

Watershed is in critical condition

Landscaping changes can make a difference

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Better get used to brown yards.

That's because there just isn't enough water during peak times to maintain the lush, green New England landscape that area residents are accustomed to.

"Towns will be required to stop people from watering lawns or they won't have water in the tap or in the fire hydrants," warns Mike Walsh of Quincy-based Horticultural Concepts.

Walsh made his remarks last week during a meeting of the Weymouth-Weir Rivers Watershed Sub-Team at Hingham Town Hall. Two years ago, part of the Weir River and its tributaries went completely dry — a scenario that is being repeated in the summer months at rivers around the state.

The Weir River Watershed includes North Cohasset and all or part of Hingham, Hull, Quincy, Milton, Randolph, Braintree, Holbrook, Avon, Weymouth, Rockland and Norwell.

Walsh explained that rainfall recharges only about 70 percent of the watershed and the groundwater has not recovered from last year's low levels. A watershed is the land area that drains to a body of water such as a stream, river, pond or the ocean.

"If climate patterns continue, we're going to be in a worse situation," Walsh said.

Rich Kleiman of the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs said the EOEA has watershed teams – like the Weir River team – across the state.

"I wouldn't say 'the sky is falling'," said Kleiman who heads the Mass. watershed initiative that takes a "holistic" approach to managing water resources. That means looking at the total "water budget," which examines all water going into a body of water from all sources and all water going out and its effect on the environment.

"But there is more and more concern about the way we use water," he said. "We look at our coastal rivers including the Ipswich and Neponset and they are becoming stressed."

Kleiman said if that continues the rivers will not be able to support a range of species including herring, bass and trout.

Homeowners' irrigation systems are a contributing factor depleting the water supply during peak usage times.

Peak demand is the most detrimental to the environment and the hardest demand to supply, says Walsh, the horticulturist.

"The biggest offender on water usage is lawns," says Walsh, describing an acre lot as 30,000 square feet of grass. "The problem is our regulatory structure like building codes doesn't address landscaping."

"The problem is our regulatory structure like building codes doesn't address landscaping."
— Mike Walsh of Horticultural Concepts

Homeowners, however, can make a difference through what Walsh describes as "environmentally sound landscaping," a concept that uses less lawn by planting more shade trees, perennials, ornamental grasses and shrubs.

"It would be low maintenance and high color," Walsh says.

And soon homeowners may not have a choice, both Walsh and Kleiman say it will become harder and harder to get new wells permitted.

"The way things are developing, there's less and less water to go around," Kleiman said.

A representative from the Ipswich River watershed team, said at the meeting that people just don't get it.

She said the Ipswich River was dry and right next to it, people were running their sprinklers. They don't see the hydrological connection between the watershed and their well.

Walsh's presentation that went into detail about environmentally sound landscaping was videotaped by Media One. To find out when the video will be shown on cable-TV or how to borrow a copy, contact Kleiman at 617-727-9693 x293 or by e-mail at rich.kleiman@state.ma.us. Walsh recently gave a presentation to a meeting of the Community Garden Club of Cohasset.

Boatyard's future is still uncertain

In negotiations with Peter Roy

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The boatyard at the Mill River Marine Railway Inc. on Border Street operates in the same spot it has for over 30 years, but the sale of the property to Peter Roy puts the longtime Cohasset landmark's future in doubt.

"I don't know yet what's going to happen," said boatyard owner Frank Carey. "We're still negotiating with Peter Roy."

Assessor Cheryl Pooler said Cohasset Gulph, LLC, headed by Roy, purchased the property at 82 Border Street on February 11 for $710,000.

Roy of Margin Street could not be reached for comment about his plans for the property, but his attorney Charles Humphreys said Roy was trying to figure out a way to restore the site and have it make some financial sense.

"It will definitely stay a marina-related facility," he said.

Cohasset Lobster Pound owner Tommy Alioto, who runs his business on the same property, said he has been told to vacate by June 1.

"It's going to make things very difficult for Cohasset lobstermen, because now they're going to have to run all over the place to sell their lobsters," said Alioto, who indicated his business would likely relocate to Hull. "They're about 30 people in town I buy from and it's going to make things harder on them, and harder on me."

If the boatyard is forced to vacate as well, it will mark an end to its amazing resilience. The former owner of the property, William Hanney, president of Stoughton-based Entertainment Cinemas, bought the property in 1993 for $350,000 at a Bank of Brockton auction. One of the terms of the sale was that the property be free of tenants, which seemed to indicate the boatyard would be forced to leave.

The fate of the Mill River Marine Railway building – known as Cohasset's Motif #1 – is still up in the air.

Hanney originally wanted to build a large, private home for himself but scrapped the plan due to neighborhood opposition. He instead settled on a plan to allow the Lobster Pound to remain and to build a smaller boatyard, three condominiums, and rental space.

Carey, however, refused to leave. In 1994, Dedham Superior Court Judge Elizabeth Donovan upheld the eviction, but Carey appealed Donovan's decision, marking the beginning of a series of events which stalled and ultimately capsized Hanney's plans to renovate the property.

Hanney also had difficulty obtaining a Chapter 91 permit from the state DEP to conduct business and perform building renovations in a water-related area. Carey still operates his boatyard with a Chapter 91 permit, which used to be granted for 99 years for a small fee.

In the mid 1980s, however, the DEP took over the Chapter 91 permitting process, changing the guidelines for achieving a permit. The DEP would grant 99-year amnesty permits to landowners proposing renovations which would not alter water-related uses. Because the eviction of the boatyard would result in a change of water-related uses, officials from DEP said the action could have resulted in a denial of a Chapter 91 permit.

Whether Roy's plans for the property will meet with more success than Hanney's remains to be seen. But his proposed renovations at the Olde Salt House and his involvement with the much talked-about revitalization of the village and harbor indicate he is serious about sprucing up the ramshackle buildings currently located by the boatyard.

"The site is in a state of disrepair and needs a lot of care and attention," Humprheys said. "It is going to be an expensive project."

National Drinking Water Week, May 7 to 13, is an educational campaign aimed at helping people understand the importance of safe drinking water.

This year the theme of Drinking Water Week is "Water Works Wonders." Providing safe drinking water is everyone's business. Issues such as source water protection, new methods of water treatment, additional sources of supply and ever increasing regulations make drinking water an important public collaborative. Get involved and find out more about what it takes to deliver your drinking water. We look forward to seeing you on May 10. Refreshments will be provided.

HOT SHOTS

A group of fifth- and sixth-graders from Cohasset recently qualified to participate in the Tobacco Free Hot Shots Regional Competition held last Friday, April 28, at Braintree High.

Sixth-graders who qualified by being a top scorer in a basketball shootout, sponsored by the South Shore Boards of Health Collaborative, included: Trevor Brady, Michael Martone, Aiden Buick, Mia Lieb-Lappen, Erin Liddell and Katie Bulger. Fifth-graders included: Anthony Fiori, Keith Mier, Dan Trendowicz, Michelle Madge, Lindsay Durkin and Amanda Smith.

The kids were among 5,000 fifth- and sixth-graders on the South Shore who participated in local competitions, while health educators presented information about the harmful effects of smoking and dangers of breathing second-hand smoke.

Top scorers in the Braintree "shoot out" will head to the state finals at Boston University.

NEWS FLASH! Just heard from the health collaborative and the following Cohasset kids qualified for the finals at the Braintree "shoot out" Friday night: Keith Mier finished third in the fifth-grade boys division; Mia Lieb-Lappen and Emma Weston took second and third place, respectively, in the sixth-grade girls division!

Good luck at BU!

LIKE TO WRITE?

The Cohasset Mariner is looking for a local resident to compile the weekly Around Town column. The new columnist would pick up the baton from long-time columnist Sallyann Chatterton, who recently decided to retire after more than 15 years. It might be fun for someone who's lived in town a while or for a newcomer who'd like to get to know the town better. Please call Mary Ford, 741-2933 with questions.

P.S. We will miss Sallyann terribly! We know she will continue to be a friend to Around Town as a great source of good news. Thanks for all your hard work and support over the years, Sallyann!

OLD FRIEND

We had the pleasure of running into Osborne Ingram at town hall on Friday. For those of you who don't know Ozzie, just take it from us, he is one of those people who make Cohasset a special place. He is always willing to lend a hand where needed. Thanks for brightening our day!

CLASS OF 2000

Editor Mary Ford also recently took over as editor of Max, the monthly women's magazine that is distributed with your Cohasset Mariner once a month. Our June theme is the "Class of 2000" and we're looking for women who are either graduating from high school, college or graduate school to feature. Valedictorians, women off to West Point or Annapolis, someone entering an unusual career, someone who went back to school and is graduating, etc. – might make good stories. Call us with tips at 741-2933. Watch for Max (with a Mother's Day theme that you'll enjoy) in your next week's paper.

TOP VOLUNTEER!

For the first time, the Arts & Business Council of Greater Boston and its Avenue of the Arts (Huntington Avenue) partner, Top of the Hub Restaurant, presented "Tops of the Avenue" Awards, recognizing outstanding volunteers of the Avenue of the Arts cultural community. The "Tops of the Avenue" Awards honors one exceptional volunteer – from each participating Avenue of the Arts organization – who generously contributes his or her own time and effort.

Cohasset's own David Burnham of Atlantic Avenue was honored for his volunteerism at the Boston Public Library!

Two years ago Boston Mayor Thomas M. Menino officially designated Huntington Avenue as The Avenue of the Arts to reflect the historic thoroughfare's significance in the city's and nation's cultural life.

MUSIC RECITALS

The South Shore Music Teachers' Organization has presented three recitals again this year: jazz/pop, classical and ensemble. The final event in May is a Sonatina Festival with Elizabeth Reed as the evaluator. She is a former faculty member of the South Shore Conservatory, Milton Academy and other music schools. Cohasset participants, pupils of Olive Mullen, are Ross and Mia Lieb-Lappen, Saran and Josh Lambert, Miranda Lanzillotti, Katie DeWaal and Megan Sacks. The recitals are held at The James Center for the Arts in Norwell and at St. Andrews Church in Hanover.

Don't forget to send us your good news! This is where Cohasset residents have unlimited bragging rights. We want to hear about new babies, new grandchildren, college accomplishments, etc.! The list is endless. Items may be dropped off at Cohasset News on Brook Street, sent by mail to the Cohasset Mariner, 73 South St. Hingham, 02043, by fax to 741-2931 or by e-mail to cohasset@cnc.com. Let us hear from you.

Four-time cancer survivor walking for others

81-year-old looks forward to her fourth Relay for Life

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Of all the events which take place at the annual Relay For Life at Cohasset High School to benefit the American Cancer Society, one of the most heartwarming is the Survivors' Lap, as those who are battling or have beaten the disease walk as a living monument to the good cancer research has done.

Cohasset's Mary Ahearn, 81, has twice walked that lap and plans to do so again this year. However, Ahearn would have to walk four laps each year to truly represent the battles she has waged and won against four different types of cancer in the last 15 years.

Ahearn's medical problems began in 1986, as she prepared to embark upon a walking trip to Scotland. She kept noticing sores across the bridge of her nose, but said her physicians assured her there was little to worry about.

"It was sore right where the nose of my glasses hit," Ahearn said. "Each time I complained about it, my doctor pooh-poohed it. It would just keep scabbing over and bleed. The whole time, I had this innocuous little cancer that was going right down into the bones of my nose."

Ahearn was diagnosed weeks later with basal-cell cancer, and had cells removed from her nose. The cancer had nearly spread to one of her eyes, but was caught just in time. A plastic surgeon performed a skin graft from Ahearn's ear to repair the damage, and she left for the Vancouver World's Fair later that year, hopeful her problems were behind her.

For nearly three years, cancer was no longer a part of Ahearn's life. In 1989, however, a different form of the disease would manifest itself.

"I had a mammogram on the day the Gulf War started, in the mobile unit in front of Town Hall which was sponsored by the Social Service League," Ahearn said. "The mammogram showed a small lump."

If not for the annual mammogram testing in town, Ahearn said the lump may have been detected much later.

"It's just so much more convenient to go and have it done downtown," she said. "There was a wonderful staff of well-trained technicians, and I'm thankful for the job they did."

"I feel incredibly lucky, actually. Each of these cancers has had symptoms that were unmistakable and were caught early."

— Cancer survivor Mary Ahearn

Ahearn had a lumpectomy to remove the cancerous cells in her breast and began a month of daily radiation treatments at Beth Israel Hospital. She also took the hormone tamoxifen for five years.

"There was a huge study going on about breast cancer at the time," Ahearn said. "It was suspected later that tamoxifen might have a propensity to cause uterine cancer."

A synthetic hormone, tamoxifen had been shown to help reduce breast cancer but has now been shown to double the risk of endometrial cancer, which attacks the uterine lining. Unfortunately, Ahearn began to develop symptoms consistent with uterine cancer in 1994.

"Almost five years to the day I began taking tamoxifen, on my 75th birthday, it was determined I did indeed have uterine cancer," Ahearn said. "After a lot of study to find the cancer cells, I went to Boston to have a hysterectomy. Luckily, the cancer was in the very beginning stages."

Ahearn said she was one of the first in the Boston area to suffer uterine cancer as a result of taking tamoxifen, but said similar cases have been reported locally in recent years.

"When I went into Beth Israel complaining about uterine pain, the doctor said I was the first breast cancer patient who had come in with those symptoms," she said. "I go to an oncologist regularly now at South Shore Hospital in Weymouth, and he said he's had several women come in with similar cases."

The regular visits to her oncologist proved invaluable in October 1998, when the doctor noticed something abnormal during a routine checkup.

"I was sitting on the examining table on the doctor's office and he said, 'What's this on your back?'" Ahearn said. "They found out I had melanoma, and the only thing you can do is cut it out."

This time, the incisions to remove cancerous cells were fairly extensive.

"The pathology department did a conservative, careful job of getting it all," Ahearn said. "I now have a large hole in my back, near where my neck, back, and shoulders come together. I tend to choose a lot of turtlenecks now."

While Ahearn's recurrences of cancer may seem overwhelming, she said she doesn't feel she's been unfairly burdened with her health problems.

"I don't know if it's better to have it four different times in four different places than to have it come back to the same spot," she said. "I feel incredibly lucky, actually. Each of these cancers has had symptoms that were unmistakable and were caught early. I feel very fortunate and blessed to have had excellent doctors who were on the ball and pursued it every time."

Cancer survivor Mary Ahearn of Cohasset will be a familiar figure at the Relay For Life, June 9-10.

Despite the fact that she's beaten four different types of cancer, Ahearn said she doesn't really think of herself as someone who has waged and won a battle against the disease.

"When people talk about cancer patients, I don't really think of myself as one of those people who've been fighting it," she said. "Everybody's different. It's all in when it's caught."

Ahearn said she is looking forward to the good spirit engendered by those at the Relay For Life, which will be held this year on June 9-10.

"One of the things they do is sell luminaries," she said. You buy them and either put someone's name on it who died from cancer or is being treated for it. Then they put the luminaries on the inside of the track. The first time I went, I discovered several people had done one for me and I was so touched."

Once nightfall arrives, the luminaries are lit and everyone moves to the infield of the track for the Survivors' Walk, as those who have beaten cancer take their turn around the track. Ahearn said the ceremony is beautiful.

"When you get around to the beginning again, everyone comes bursting onto the track, hugging you," she said. "It's very emotional and very moving, with all the lights flickering from the luminaries. It's a wonderful scene."

THE DESIGNING WOMAN
by Kathleen Fox ASID

SPOUTING OFF

In terms of construction, kitchen faucets come in two varieties: with washers or without. Those with washers have a compression-seal mechanism equipped with a series of rubber washers that control the flow of water. Washerless faucets operate by one of three mechanisms: a plastic or ceramic cartridge; a plastic, brass or stainless steel ball valve; or a ceramic disk. Ceramic cartridges and disks are more durable than plastic and remain unaffected by water temperature. While other factors such as styling and finish will influence the price of a kitchen faucet, the cost outlay for durable internal components is usually deemed to be well worth it. Homeowners like to feel confident that they won't suffer the aggravation of a dripping faucet.

Few people have the time or resources to stay current with the various kitchen hardware that exists. The Designing Woman respects your time and provides thoughtful, expert recommendations on the selection of hardware, flooring cabinetry and more. Our installation service includes ordering materials from suppliers, scheduling deliveries and coordinating the work of craftsmen. Above all, we seek a sense of refinement and quality. Call us at 383-6411 to arrange a consultation.

Good for the soul

Sunday morning, around 40,000 people will pull on their most comfortable shoes, tuck water bottles and Power Bars into their backpacks and head off on a lifesaving hike.

OK, maybe the annual Project Bread Walk for Hunger doesn't perform the kind of "lifesaving" you'd see in the ER of a hospital and it doesn't pull people out of flaming buildings. But the $40 million that walkers have raised through pledges from friends, family, co-workers and companies since the first Walk for Hunger in 1969 has put food on the table for countless people over the years. The Walk for Hunger is said to be the largest annual walk to fight hunger in the world. If you've ever been part of this seemingly endless sea of happy and dedicated hikers weaving through the streets from the Boston Common, through Brookline, Newton, Watertown, Cambridge and back to Boston, you know that claim has to be true.

Project Bread, the nonprofit group running the walk, says this year that 72 percent of the food pantries and kitchens in Massachusetts that the organization funds report an increase in demand for food.

Project Bread, the nonprofit group running the walk, says this year that 72 percent of the food pantries and kitchens in Massachusetts that the organization funds report an increase in demand for food. To meet the demand, scores of local schools, religious groups and companies — large and small — are pushing harder this year to organize walkers and increase the donations. You don't need to be connected with any business or group to walk. You just pick up a pledge sheet, round up pledges and show up bright and early Sunday at the Boston Common. The Project Bread volunteers and corporate sponsors supply encouragement, water and refreshments along the way, and with those thousands of fellow walkers, you'll never get lost on the route. For our money, there's no better way to spend the first Sunday in May, and the good that results is immeasurable.

Walking 20 miles does put some wear and tear on the human body, but it does wonders for the soul.

(For more information about walking this Sunday call 617-723-5000 or see www.projectbread.org on the Web).

Save a tree

Fifty-seven million trees were cut for catalogs last year. Catalogs represent 3 percent of all the trash landfilled in our nation.

Have we got your attention? A quick and very simple way to curtail duplicate or unwanted catalogs is to get a big manila envelope and address it to: Direct Marketing Association Mail Preference Service, P.O. Box 9008, Farmingdale, NY 11735.

Keep the envelope near where you sort mail. Tear off the mailing label portion from each unwanted catalog. When the envelope is full, write a note that you would like your name removed from all the lists in the envelope. Households that succeed in stopping unwanted catalogs, are truly "saving a tree." Thanks to Claire Sullivan, planner for the South Shore Recycling Cooperative, for this useful information.

Deer Hill playground

TO THE EDITOR:

This past weekend, another "textbook" example of "Volunteerism" was exhibited in Cohasset at the Deer Hill School. Principal, Paul Callahan, worked beside parents, students of Deer Hill and their siblings, along with parents who do not even have children at Deer Hill yet! The weather turned out to be glorious and the results awesome. Stop by to see the newly installed outdoor play equipment at Deer Hill.

Our deepest thanks go to.....Paul Callahan, Mark Haddad and the Town of Cohasset, Joseph's Hardware, John MacCarthy, John and Trish Fortin, Seth Hart, Jim Farren, Paul Guinee, Chris Collins-Wooley, Paul Tarpey, Brian Connors, Jamie and Lynn Conway, Mark Flibotte, Melody Maurer and Bob Deutch, Sarah and Jim Porter, Nancy St. John, Rena Karp and Lynn Sheridan.

Our children were right there shoveling crushed stone, digging holes, and spre ading wood chips. We would like to thank Nathan and Ian Porter, Thomas Flibotte, Eric and Sean MacCarthy, Teddy and Philip Galligan, Evan Deutch, Syndey and Samantha Fortin and Justin and Ryan Connors.

Thanks also to those friends who baby-sat our children and who donated the use of equipment for use in the installation; it truly was a community effort!

Protecting land

TO THE EDITOR,

Thank you for bringing to our attention the current status of Moors Rocks. I feel it would be a great loss if this property were to be developed. I hope it will be protected in perpetuity.

One of the problems of donating Cohasset land to be protected as open space is a question of trust. "Can the donor trust the recipient to protect the land in perpetuity?" The recent Open Space Survey revealed a number of Cohasset residents interested in donating land to be protected as open space.

These people need to be able to trust their gift will remain protected.

While the Trustees of Reservations and the Cohasset Conservation Trust will accept some parcels for protection, other parcels fail to meet their criteria. I believe the Town needs an additional procedure or entity that would:

- be completely trustworthy
- make it easy to donate land for protection
- make the legal conditions and expenses clearly understood
- make the tax implications for donor and Town clearly understood

COHASSET CARES

Catalogs! catalogs! catalogs!

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

First of all I want to mention that the Earth Day article that appeared here several weeks ago Thursday, April 20, was written by Cohasset Recycling Committee member Carol Martin. Somehow Carol's name was omitted from the piece.

Now catalogs. You've got 'em, I've got 'em, we've all got 'em. Too many of 'em. Rains dissipate, but catalogs don't. We hope that as you've been receiving them, you've also been squirming about the cost of producing them. Here it is, kindness of Claire Sullivan, South Shore Recycling Cooperative Planner:

Tired of bringing the garbage IN?

How much real mail do you get in your mailbox? Last year the catalog industry consumed 3.35 million tons of virgin paper, or 12 percent of all printing and writing paper used in the U. S., to stuff our mailboxes with unsolicited mail. Fifty-seven million trees were cut for catalogs. On the other end, catalogs represent 3 percent of all the trash landfilled in our nation. It is estimated that only 10-20 percent of them are recycled.

Since catalogs compose such a significant portion of our waste, it would behoove us all to try to reduce the amount of them delivered to our own doors and to those of our neighbors. There are several ways to request that catalog deliveries, especially duplicates, be curtailed. I have found a simple and quick way to get off many lists at once. I suggest you try it, too. Get a big manila envelope. Address it to:

Direct Marketing Association
Mail Preference Service
P.O. Box 9008
Farmingdale, NY 11735

Keep the envelope near where you sort your mail. Tear off the mailing label portion from each unwanted catalog and put it in the envelope, and recycle the rest of the catalog. When the envelope is full, write a note that you would like your name removed from all the lists in the envelope. Stamp it and mail it.

To stay off new lists, be careful from whom you purchase and to whom you give your mailing information [i.e., contests].

Households that succeed in stopping unwanted catalogs are truly "saving a tree."

Support school library legislation

LOCAL VIEW

JOAN GALLAGHER

Library Media Centers, the "hidden treasure" in Massachusetts schools, are often underfunded and understaffed in spite of studies which link higher academic achievement to schools that have professionally staffed and financially supported library media centers. On the state level the implications for MCAS scores is obvious.

Adding to the problem of underfunding and understaffing is a widespread lack of understanding as to the integral role school libraries can play within the education process. At the lower grades, the role of the library media specialist is to work with teachers to instill reading skills and a love of the written word.

In middle and high schools, library media specialists work closely with the content area teachers to incorporate information literacy skills into subject specific activities. Today's library media specialist helps guide students to learn the best skills for not only finding information on all formats (books, AV and computer-based), but to also best use the located information. We are trying to bring an awareness to students, educators and the community of the evolving role of the library media center and its staff.

Our legislative effort, a bill recently filed by Sen. Susan Tucker (D-2nd Essex and Middlesex), will insure support for the school library media center and its professional staff. The legislation not only includes these important professionals in the foundation formula for the Education Reform Bill, but it also set state-wide standards for staffing and budget. The hearing for S#2148 will be held by the Joint Education Committee during May.

FACT SHEET FROM THE MASSACHUSETTS SCHOOL LIBRARY MEDIA ASSOCIATION

The problem:

National statistics establish that Massachusetts education policy makers and administrators are not supporting the power of school library resources, staff and programming to help Massachusetts students achieve. The Massachusetts Department of Education has no administrative position responsible for coordinating and setting standards for its school library media programs statewide. Statistics from the U.S. Office of Educational Research and Improvement (NCES 98-282) confirms that Massachusetts public school students are not working in information-rich learning environments. There are both unacceptable learning conditions and inequity of access to library media resources and staff in public schools throughout Massachusetts.

- Only 19 percent of Massachusetts teachers strongly agreed their school library media centers were adequate to support educational objectives.
- Massachusetts public schools ranked 47 out of the 50 states in number of students per school librarian with only California, Mississippi and Rhode Island ranking lower.
- 13 percent of Massachusetts public schools do not provide library media center programs for their students and staff.
- In public schools with library media centers, the average book expenditure in 1993 was $6.93 per pupil, which was $1.07 less than 35 years earlier.
- Massachusetts school libraries have less seating and less access to computers and information technology than school libraries nationally (For more statistics contact our website at: www.mslma.org).

The solution: Educational research has firmly established higher student academic achievement is associated with:

- a school library media center which is equipped with a quality collection of books and other educational media professionally selected to support and enrich the school's curriculum.
- school library media programs which are adequately staffed, according to national guidelines, with professionals who are an integral part of the planning and teaching team of the learning community.
- free voluntary reading and a school-wide effort to develop avid, capable readers.
- administrative support of the school library media program and collaboration between classroom teachers and the library media specialist.
- information technology that extends the reach of the library media program into classrooms and labs and beyond the school walls.
- a well-organized, formally requested budget adequate to support an effective school library media program.

Joan Gallagher is the library media specialist at Cohasset Middle/High School and president of the Mass. School Library Media Assoc.

Local mother takes aim at gun laws

Organizes bus for 'Million Mom March'

If you could end gun violence, would you? This Mothers' Day, a million or more moms and others from across the country are saying yes to this question by their presence at the Million Mom March on Washington for common sense gun policy. It was the shooting at the Granada Hills day camp last August, where two of the victims were the same age as her own children, that determined march organizer Donna Dees-Thomases.

"One week later, I applied for a permit to march on the Mall in Washington D.C. nine months later. As a mother, I know what can be created in this amount of time," writes Dees-Thomases.

Here in Cohasset, Amyra O'Connell, a mother of four, has arranged for a bus of local supporters of sensible gun laws to be part of the march. The group will leave the village at 6 p.m. on Saturday May 13, travel all night, participate in the demonstration and return on Sunday. O'Connell's daughter, Amyra Chase, 13, an eighth grader at the middle school, is recruiting members of her class to come along.

"I can't bear to hear of another child shooting without doing something about it," says O'Connell.

According to the Center for Disease Control, the rate of firearm death of children 0-14 years old is nearly 12 times higher in the U.S. than in 25 other industrialized nations combined. In 1996, more than 1300 children aged 10-19 committed suicide with firearms, the most lethal of all methods of suicide attempts.

On May 14, local moms, along with thousands of mothers and others on the National Mall "will put Congress on notice that common sense gun policy — specifically licensing and registration — is the will of the people," says Dees-Thomas, who has her message on a web page at www.millionmommarch.com. "For too long we have ignored the gun violence epidemic because it was always in somebody else's backyard. We cannot afford to ignore it any longer. Our children's lives are far too precious."

For information call Elizabeth Miles, the project director for Stop Handgun Violence and Massachusetts State Coordinator for the Million Mom March at 617-243-8145. For information on the bus leaving Cohasset, at a cost of $68 per seat, call Amyra O'Connell at 383-1574. Donations are also appreciated, O'Connell said.

On being politically correct

In case you didn't notice, National Secretaries Day came and went last week with all the fanfare of General Sherman's birthday in Georgia.

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Don't worry. There is good reason for this oversight. It's not National Secretaries Day anymore. It's National Administrative Professionals Day.

You remember secretaries, don't you?

They're the nubile young things who wear their hair long and their skirts short and who used to be chased around the executive desk when things were slow on a Friday afternoon.

Then Anita Hill blew the whistle on Clarence Thomas and secretaries no longer had to brew the morning cup of coffee for the boss or purchase those last minute birthday presents for his wife.

Don't bother getting flowers or a box of candy for your secretary anymore. Your administrative professional would like something more substantial, like a cash bonus.

"Unless they were going to give me 50 bucks or something, I'd rather forget it," an unidentified AP told the Herald last week.

They who were called secretaries even have their own professional society now: the International Association of Administrative Professionals.

They who were called secretaries even have their own professional society now: the International Association of Administrative Professionals.

It's like calling shoeshine boys by their more politically correct name, "footware maintenance engineers," or car washers by the more appropriate "vehicle appearance specialists" or dishwashers as "utensil sanitizers."

That's what they're called in Henry Beard and Christopher Cerf's "The Official Politically Correct Dictionary and Handbook," which is becoming an important part of my reference library along with the dictionary and the World Almanac.

Everyone should have one to help him (or her, but mostly him) through the new millennium when language has been pruned of all the terms that are deemed to be demeaning by someone, anyone.

It must be working already. I haven't used the term "dumb broad" since I acquired my copy and learned that the correct term for the 21st Century is "intellectually challenged woperson."

("Woperson" is the politically correct word for "woman," according to some feminists who are determined to get the "man" out of "woman," if you'll pardon the expression.)

In Beard and Cerf's lexicon, whores become "persons presenting themselves as commodity allotments within a business doctrine," although I prefer the second definition, "sex care provider."

Robbers and druggies become "ethically disoriented individuals and persons with a pharmaceutical preference," and getting fired is taking part in "a career alternative enhancement program."

A dirty old man is a "sexually focused chronologically gifted individual," a hamburger is "a processed animal carcass," a janitor is an "environmental hygienist," and an airplane crash is "failure to maintain clearance from the ground."

If you want to learn more about "The Official Politically Correct Dictionary and Handbook," call my administrative professional.

She'll be the one out getting me a cup of coffee or, if it's Friday afternoon, she'll be the one running around the desk.

Mosquito control is topic

The Gulf Association announces its annual spring meeting, to be held at the Lightkeeper's House on Government Island on Cohasset Harbor, Tuesday, May 9, at 7:30 p.m. Ellen Orrell, entomologist and member of the Plymouth County Mosquito Control Project, will speak on the issue of mosquito and midge control on saltmarsh wetlands. The public is invited.

Free hot dogs are offered

Again this year the non-profit Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation will express its thanks to the community with free hot dogs, hamburgers and soft drinks immediately after the Memorial Day parade. All are welcome at Bancroft Hall.

For further information call R.M. Campbell at 383-1379

Beechwood graves available

Gravesites at the Beechwood Cemetery are now available for purchase on a pre-need basis to residents and former residents who resided in Cohasset for a period of one continuous year.

The cost per grave is $725 for residents and $1,000 for former residents. Grave purchases are limited to two gravesites in any cemetery under the jurisdiction of the Town of Cohasset.

Anyone wishing to inquire about purchasing graves should contact the D.P.W. office either in person or by phone, 383-0273.

SENATE RACE NOTEBOOK

Democrats name campaign managers

By Jeanne M. Rideout
STAFF WRITER

The two contenders for the Democratic nomination in this fall's Senate race have named their campaign managers. Vying for the spot on the Democratic ballot are James Cantwell, a Weymouth attorney and Ted LeClair, Marshfield, a founder of LeClair Brothers Cranberry Company.

The Plymouth-Norfolk Senate district includes Cohasset, Duxbury, Hingham, Hull, Scituate, Marshfield, Weymouth and a portion of Braintree.

Kerrianne Karlberg has been named campaign manager of the Ted LeClair for State Senate campaign. She will oversee all of the campaign's major operations, including strategic planning, fundraising, scheduling, communications and volunteer coordination, and will act as a key advisor to LeClair.

A fourth-generation Weymouth resident, Karlberg is a veteran of area politics, including the campaigns of her mother, former Weymouth School Committee member Carol Striano Karlberg.

In addition to serving as Ted LeClair's campaign manager, Karlberg is a school adjustment counselor at READS Academy in East Bridgewater, a licensed certified social worker and a member of the National Association of Social Workers. She is a graduate of Clark University and holds a master of science degree from Columbia University with a minor in law. Karlberg lives in Weymouth and is a communicant of the Immaculate Conception Church.

More information on LeClair's candidacy is available by calling (781) 837-7531.

Jim Cantwell has announced his choices for honorary cochairmen of his campaign.

Peg MacKenzie, of Abbott Street, and Fran Tucci, a Summer Street resident, both of Weymouth, have accepted the positions.

Peg MacKenzie has been the Democratic State Committee Woman for the past 16 years. She is also a past chairperson of the Democratic Town Committee and currently serves on the executive board. MacKenzie also served on the board of zoning appeals in Weymouth, and was chief of staff for Sen. Bill Golden and an aide to Sen. Allan McKinnon.

MacKenzie said she has known Cantwell since he was in high school.

Fran Tucci, owner of Bridge Antiques in North Weymouth, is the current chairman of the Permanent Memorial Committee. He is also a member of the Memorial Wall Committee, Friends of the Korean Memorial Committee and Friends of the Memorial Wall Committee. Tucci is very active in the Homestead Civic Association and is a corporator at the South Shore Savings Bank. He is also a member of the executive board of the Weymouth Democratic Town Committee.

For more information about the Jim Cantwell for State Senate Campaign, call Cantwell at 335-0121.

CANDIDATES CORNER

Holden open house

On Tuesday, May 23, Cohasset residents are invited to an Open House to meet Mike Holden, Democratic Candidate for State Representative. This is a great opportunity to talk with Holden on issues that affect Cohasset and the Third Plymouth District. The event will be held at the Lightkeeper's House and kicks off at 6 p.m. For more information, call Barb Mullin at 383-0953 or Steve Norton at 925-3847.

McKenna 'kick-off'

The Citizens for Mary Anne McKenna campaign committee will hold a "Kick-Off" fund/fun raiser at the South Shore Country Club in Hingham Friday, May 5.

The event will be from 6 to 11 p.m. and will feature Steve Sweeney, Boston's "King of Comedy," at 7 p.m., along with the South Shore's best D.J. Rick Goldstein, and the Rockin' Blues Band "The Soul Providers" from Washington D.C. A buffet will also be served.

For more information and tickets, call Billy Ramsey at 749-2532, Nancy Wilkinson at 383-0187 or Kay Mahoney at 925-1084. All are welcome.

Bradley open house

The Garrett Bradley Campaign for state representative will hold an open house at the campaign headquarters Saturday, May 6, from 10 a.m. to noon. The headquarters is located directly above the Sons of Italy Hall, 88 Chief Justice Cushing Highway on the corner of Route 3A and Kilby Street. Residents can stop by for coffee and pastries, and a chance to meet Garrett and ask questions about issues facing the community.

The campaign office is staffed Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m., and Saturday from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. For more information about Bradley and his campaign, residents can call the headquarters at 740-7272.

Devine campaign to conduct meeting

Maureen A. Devine, candidate for State Representative in Hingham, Hull and Cohasset, will hold a campaign meeting Saturday, May 6, from 3 to 5 p.m.

"As the town meeting and election season draws to a close, I feel it is appropriate to now ask the voters to think about the fall process. The last few months have been a busy time for many of us in government office. As a five-year member of the Hingham School Committee, I worked hard with my colleagues to present a budget to voters at Town Meeting that was educationally sound and fiscally responsible. With that behind me, I can now concentrate on effectively communicating my message to the citizens of the Plymouth Third District. Running for office is a serious business and my campaign will reflect that," Devine said.

The meeting Saturday, open to all volunteers and supporters, will be at the home of Nancy and Jim Tartol, 8 Pleasant Run, Hingham; telephone 740-1186. For information, supporters can also call Julie Guild at 383-6443 (Cohasset) and Marlene Bloom at 925-1413 (Hull). All contributions to the Maureen Devine for State Representative committee can be addressed to Dennis Bottone, Campaign Treasurer, 46 Pioneer Road, Hingham, MA 02043. Devine can be reached at 740-1334.

Train advisory group to get back on track

he knew of at least three vacancies including one created when former member Kevin Dasey became the MBTA senior project coordinator.

The Greenbush CAC went inactive when the Army Corps of Engineers took oversight of the federal Section 106 review process at about the time the MBTA decided to fund Greenbush with state dollars. The Section 106 process that considers project effects on historical and archeological resources is wrapping up, Fancher said.

He expects that once reconvened and reorganized the CAC would take from six-to-eight months to complete its review of the MBTA's environmental feasibility study, called a draft environmental impact report. The CAC's review would include the train's impact on historic resources, mitigation, and the analysis of alternatives, such as the short tunnel under Hingham Square.

"We are not a policy driven body," Fancher said. "We react to what is presented to us." He explained that the a CAC — required for any major and complicated project that must file an Environmental Notification Form — rules on whether the chief proponent of the project (in this case the MBTA) has done an adequate job. Once that process is complete, Durand – the environmental secretary – would conduct a series of forums soliciting public comment before issuing a certificate, which is an order of conditions, telling the MBTA what is has to do if the train is to go ahead.. Then it's up to the MBTA to make a determination whether to meet those conditions and go forward.

Fancher, who is general manager of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce, said despite the delays, he is thinks Greenbush will be built.

"I've never been more sure than I have been in the last two months," he said.

But no matter which side of the tracks CAC members might be on, Fancher said they all have one thing in common.

"I think I can say in all sincerity that we want to see the environmental process finished," he said. "We want resolution."

Cohasset CAC members are Martha Gjesteby, Debbie Cook and Ed Fegreus.

Gjesteby, the only one reached for comment Tuesday, said she was looking forward to getting back to work.

"We have unfinished work to do," she said.

Open house on Greenbush is May 16

The US Army Corps of Engineers and the MBTA will hold an informal public meeting to gather information on historic resources along the Greenbush Line and Greenbush project effects and mitigation for historic resources in Cohasset from 6-8 p.m., Tuesday, May 16 at the Town Hall auditorium.

Maps showing historic resources and proposed mitigation will be on display and informational material will be available. Corps and MBTA representatives will answer questions and listen to local views on significant historic resources and historical resource issues. If you have questions, contact Kevin Dasey, MBTA senior project coordinator, at 617-222-2086 or at kdasey@mbta.com.

area — which is the former Brockton Edison site at 365 North Main Street — is zoned residential and his proposal has more density than allowed.

Collins' partner in the project is Anthony Catlin. They have a purchase and sale agreement for the 21,000-square-foot parcel owned by Laurence Notarangelo of Hull contingent on the project getting the necessary permits.

"It's a beautiful plan," Collins said. "And hopefully what we are doing is consistent with what the town wants."

The units which would be handicapped-accessible would sell in the $250,000-$300,000 range. The units would average 1200 square feet and would be housed in one building served by an elevator. Each unit would have indoor parking, he said.

Collins said the project has received support from other town boards.

At the February hearing on the project, the zoning board — while recognizing the need for senior housing — was concerned about setting a precedent for such high density in a residential area.

Chittick said Tuesday that the zoning board had not decided anything yet but would deliberate on the matter this Monday.

"The special permit hurdles haven't been overcome and we haven't deliberated on that yet," he said.

The zoning board accepted responsibility for the missed deadline. But member Jane Goedecke noted that the board did not have sufficient staff.

would be kept to a minimum and drainage has been designed so water run off would drain in the same general pattern that it does now.

Town meeting will ultimately have the say on whether the project estimated to cost about $600,000 will go forward. Pratt explained that the income from the sale of graves would be well over $1 million. At least 25 percent of the sale of graves is set aside for perpetual care.

The current cost per grave is $725 for residents and $1,000 for former residents. Grave purchases are limited to two gravesites in any cemetery under the jurisdiction of the Town of Cohasset, according to the Department of Public Works.

ZBA member Jane Goedecke said she was concerned that the cemetery would be too urban looking with few trees.

"Could there be less density with more permeable soil and more trees?" she asked.

Pratt said the appearance could be improved through restrictions on the number of monuments, use of landscaping and installation of a flagpole, for example.

Member Barbara Power said the proposed cemetery expansion looked "so dense, so cold."

The zoning board continued the hearing until next month.

Due to a grave shortage, no graves are currently being pre-sold at Woodside. The town recently gained 300 new gravesites by redesigning the layout of Beechwood Cemetery, Pratt explained. However Beechwood is not as popular as Woodside. The town averages about

A one-day workshop with Don Stone

The South Shore Art Center will present a one-day workshop with one of the most accomplished painters in New England. "A Day with Don Stone" will take place at the Art Center, Saturday, May 6, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. The day will begin with a talk illustrated with slides in which he will explain in depth and detail his techniques of oil painting. The conversation will continue over lunch, and then in the afternoon, he will provide commentary as he creates a new oil painting. This demonstration will be followed by a wrap-up discussion.

Elected to the National Academy of Design. Stone is also a Fellow of the American Society of Marine Artists and a Dolphin Fellow of the American Watercolor Society. In this area he is active in the Guild of Boston Artists and the Copley Society.

Limited parking trims Olde Salt House seats

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The Olde Salt House will be able to open this summer but with less seating than proposed, the zoning board said this week.

In an 11th-hour compromise, the board agreed with Olde Salt House attorney Charles Humphreys that the restaurant could not exceed a total amount of seating for 60 people — the amount the restaurant was allowed under the prior owner — without coming before the zoning board with a plan for more off-street parking.

The new Olde Salt House had asked for seating of up to 96 people outside on the wharf at one time and 28 indoor seats for a total of 124 seats requiring a minimum of 42 off-street parking spaces, according to town regulations.

The zoning board will write a decision reflecting the reduction in seating and deliberate on that at its meeting on Monday, chairman Woody Chittick said.

"What the zoning board did was give us what was already there which will allow us to deal with the rest at a later date."
— Attorney Charles Humphreys

"What the zoning board did was give us what was already there which will allow us to deal with the rest at a later date," Humphreys said in a telephone interview Tuesday.

He failed to convince the zoning board at Monday's meeting that the increased seating did not represent an "expansion" as defined under the by-law. He argued that the restaurant did not lose its non-conformity because it's going to do more business.

"If that were true you'd have to check business volume for every non-conforming use and say 'now we require you to have more parking'," he said.

But member Ben Lacy said, "you clearly need more parking if there are more seats and more people."

The premises that are in the waterfront business district are non-conforming because the building is within the 10-foot side yard requirement. But the building is grandfathered because it pre-dates the adoption of the zoning by-law in 1955 and may continue permitted uses without expansion.

Peter Roy of Margin Street owns the Olde Salt House and adjacent Atlantica restaurant (the former Chart House).

The zoning board had no problem with physical changes to the site that includes construction of a wooden walkway that will connect to an existing walkway at Atlantica. The walkway will provide a connection between the Atlantica kitchen that will also serve as kitchen for the Olde Salt House and the outdoor dining part of the Olde Salt House located on the wharf. The wharf will also be enclosed by railings on three watersides as a safety measure and on the landward side to prevent people who are not customers from entering the area.

During the public hearing last month, Humphreys said that a parking area across from Kimball's motel could be used for valet parking. But the zoning board said he was unable to cite the number of vacant parking spaces that typically exist there during the summer season when Kimballs and the Olde Salt House would be their busiest.

At that hearing, several neighbors said they were concerned about overflow parking by patrons to Atlantica and the American Legion on Border Street. The neighborhood streets could not accommodate the additional cars generated by the Olde Salt House, they said.

O'Keeffe's no hitter highlights magical beginning

Greg O'Keeffe

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Greg O'Keeffe, a senior pitcher for the Cohasset varsity baseball team, achieved one of the ultimate dreams any pitcher can hope for, firing a complete game no-hitter against South Shore Vo Tech last month.

The no-hitter ran his record to an unblemished 3-0.

"That was a real confidence boost," said O'Keeffe. "It was a whole lot of fun. I remember in the fifth inning my arm was starting to hurt, and I just needed to make six more outs. And I got those last six guys."

The team behind O'Keeffe was solid on defense, including a terrific play on a soft ground ball in the hole made by sophomore shortstop Nick Bolster.

"It is so much easier to pitch when you can trust that the team behind you is going to make the play. I know that I don't have to strike out every guy to get out of an inning. That play Nick made really saved the no-hitter.

"By the last out I was shaking. I definitely did not want to throw 6 2/3 innings of no-hit ball and not come away with a no-hitter. It was really exciting for me."

O'Keeffe feels that his 5-1 strike-out-to-walk ratio (35 strikeouts with only seven walks) has played a major part in his accomplishments this year.

"Walks kill you, though it is not something you realize until you pitch," said O'Keeffe. "It seems like if you walk five guys in a game, at least two or three of them end up scoring."

"I remember in the fifth inning my arm was starting to hurt, and I just needed to make six more outs. And I got those last six guys."

Varsity coach Robert Knurek attributes the success of his pitcher to his ability to throw a strike with his fastball, curve ball or his change-up.

"He has success in staying ahead of the hitter," Knurek said. "He is usually pitching to batters from an 0-2 or a 1-2 count."

Though O'Keeffe has both a knuckleball and a screwball in his repertoire, he likes to stick to the basics.

"I don't try to be fancy," he said. "I just try to play baseball. I do have a screwball kind of pitch, but I have the most confidence in my fastball and curve ball."

O'Keeffe has played for Cohasset for five years, meaning coach Knurek has been able to see his progression from eighth grade to senior year.

"One of the nicest things about coaching him is that he sticks with it through good and bad," said Knurek.

O'Keeffe has noticed that this season has really been the year when everything has clicked for him.

"I haven't changed my style of pitching. I have just grown into it," he said.

Most recently, O'Keeffe pitched two scoreless innings in his first relief appearance of the year, collecting three strikeouts. Cohasset ended up losing that game to Hull, 10-4.

The relief appearance gave O'Keeffe 23 total innings on the season and he has surrendered only one earned run.

"He is off to an unbelievable start," said Knurek. "That is really all I can say."

Boys lacrosse valiant in defeat

Shorthanded and facing Marshfield, one of the better teams in the Pilgrim Conference, the Cohasset boys lacrosse team fought valiantly at home Tuesday afternoon before dropping a heart-breaking 7-6 decision.

The game was tied 6-6 in the closing minutes of the fourth quarter when Marshfield attacker Mike Mandeville cut through the middle and fired the game-winner past sophomore goaltender Kyle Webber, who had made several point-blank saves to keep the Skippers in the game.

The loss drops Cohasset to 5-4 overall (2-4 Pilgrim Conference). Coach Paul Sporn said the team will need to win three of its final seven games to ensure the .500 overall record necessary to qualify for the state tournament. The Skippers will begin their quest on the road Friday against Barnstable.

Despite the loss to Marshfield, both the home crowd and Sporn were appreciative of the grit with which the Skippers played.

"It was a great effort," said Sporn, whose team was without four players due to illness and suspensions. "They [Marshfield] were the favorite going in. If we were going to beat them, we'd have to control the ball and the pace of the game. We did that for the most part, but we had some mental breakdowns in the last few minutes which cost us."

The game was a fascinating con-

Girls Lacrosse nipped by Duxbury

Playing their best game of the season, the Cohasset High girls varsity lacrosse team fell to powerful Duxbury, 8-5 last Tuesday.

"Besides Hingham, Duxbury's the best team in our league," said coach Cathy Gaudiano. "If we can maintain this level of play for the second half of our schedule, we're going to do very well."

Led by co-captain Jackie Kahn's two goals, one assist and 11 ground balls, the Lady Skippers never let the Green Dragons pull away. Freshman goalie Gia Petrakis was outstanding, racking up 19 saves and clearing the ball effectively to teammates Emily Libby, Maggie O'Neil, Caitlin Stansell and Maggie O'Connor.

Other Cohasset goal-scorers were co-captain Jenny Chastain, and attackers Carolyn Cameron and Kristin Sheerin.

"We played with an intensity level that I hadn't seen yet this year," said Gaudiano. "The zone defense we put in just before spring break is beginning to work. I can't wait to play some of the teams we lost to the first time around."

Intensity — and several seniors still on a school-sponsored trip — was missing in the game at Barnstable immediately after the vacation week. In that contest, undermanned Cohasset never got untracked, falling to the Red Raiders 17-3. Scoring for the Lady Skippers were sophomores Emma Gardner and Kristin Sheerin, and freshman Sera Genovese. Petrakis had seven saves in the goal.

The girls were scheduled to travel to Falmouth on Tuesday, and to New Bedford on Thursday.

"We should be favored in both those games," said Gaudiano, whose team is currently 2-5. "If we stay focused and do our jobs, we'll be back in the hunt for a tournament berth."

Annual Little League parade is Saturday

And the women shall lead them.

For the first time in the history of Cohasset's annual Little League opening day parade, members of the girls softball league will lead the procession of youngsters from the Red Lion Inn to Barnes Field.

This year marks the first time a girls softball league has been officially organized by the town's Little League.

State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray will once again throw out the ceremonial first pitch after the parade, which is set to begin at 8:15 Saturday morning.

Fast start for girls tennis

By Andrew Mahoney
STAFF WRITER

When you coach the level of talent that the Cohasset High girls tennis team has these days, there is not a lot that worries you.

"The kids are playing really well," said coach Gigi Meehan as her team was rolling out to a 4-0 start. "They really want to win as a team."

After survivng a 3-2 scare against Hanover the first match of the season, the Skippers have won three straight 5-0 matches over Norton, Carver and Abington. But there could be trouble on the horizon.

Norwell is the only other undefeated team remaining in the South Shore League. The two squads were scheduled to face-off earlier in the season, but have had to postpone the match. Other matches have also been postponed because of the weather, and both teams have very little room to rearrange their schedules once again with proms, graduations, and SATs all on the horizon.

The first of the two meetings is scheduled for next week, but Meehan is hoping to reschedule.

"I'm going to Italy on Sunday," said Meehan, "but I'd really like to be here for that match."

"The kids are playing really well. They really want to win as a team."
Gigi Meehan

While Meehan works on that, she feels good about the Skippers' progress thus far.

"When you coach these kids for four years, you can see a change in their whole demeanor," said Meehan. "They have a presence about them. They become much more mature as players and as people."

Meehan has enjoyed coaching this group in particular.

"It is an individual sport, but nobody wishes any ill-will against each other," said Meehan.

Ary Ashfar exemplifies that team spirit Meehan speaks of.

"She was playing singles for us last year," said Meehan. "I moved her to doubles this year, and she has been great about it. The players know that they have to play where I need them."

Ashfar has done just that, combining with Jessie Zerendow at first doubles to win three matches in a row. The duo struggled in their first match, losing to Hanover, but have bounced back to win their next three.

"She's done it for the good of the team," said Meehan. "She's learned how to play doubles. When I try to put these teams together, I have to figure out who's going to play well together."

Past in styles, as Cohasset's methodical, slow-down approach was countered by Marshfield's fast-breaking and slashing toward the net.

Marshfield's frenetic style caught the Skippers off guard in the first quarter, as the Rams built a quick 3-0 lead. In the second quarter, however, Cohasset started to control the tempo, throwing the Marshfield players off their games.

"I thought they had a very good game plan," said Marshfield coach Robbie Robinson. "We were asleep for a while there."

Freshman midfielder Robert Hickey opened the scoring for Cohasset, bouncing a shot past Marshfield goaltender Matt Geary early in the second quarter. Fellow freshman Curt Kahn followed with a goal minutes later to cut the Marshfield lead to 3-2.

After the heroics of the two freshmen, junior midfielder Ronan Buick took over, intercepting a pass near midfield and scoring a spectacular goal to tie the score at 3-3.

The sterling defensive play of senior Brad Powell, who forced a turnover to start the ball upfield, led to another Buick goal and gave Cohasset its first lead at 4-3.

Cohasset then built its lead even further, as freshman midfielder Matt Davis burst right into the heart of the Marshfield defense just before halftime to give the Skippers a 5-3 advantage going into the locker room.

In the second half, however, the Rams returned to the fast-break offense which had gotten them the early lead, and scored three times to take a 6-5 lead.

Buick brought the home crowd to its feet in the fourth quarter, lining a shot past Geary, and tying the game at six. His hat-trick would be the highlight of the game for Cohasset, however, as Mandeville scored the game-winning goal for Marshfield soon afterward.

a spectacular start, going 4-0 at first singles to lead the way for the Skippers. Freshman Lindsay Grossman has played well at second singles, as has Julie Shea at third singles. At second doubles, Kelly Stone and Jessica Niessink have also been undefeated for the Skippers. Jen Meehan has seen time at second doubles as well.

"Some teams just don't have the program we have," said Meehan. "I try to mix up our lineup and get different kids in. They're great about it. They don't mind the juggling, they just say 'Cool, I get to play with so and so.'"

The Skippers will host Hanover today (Thursday), then host Norton next Monday and Norwell on Tuesday.

Meet spelling bee master of ceremonies Robert Detwiler

By Mary Sheppard
FOR THE COHASSET EDUCATION FOUNDATION

Robert Detwiler, Boston investment banker and husband of Betsey Detwiler of Buttonwood Books and Toys, will be the master of ceremonies for the Cohasset Education Foundation's Sixth Annual Spelling Bee Tuesday, May 9, in the Cohasset High School cafeteria.

Hailing from Norwell, where he and his family have lived for 35 years, Detwiler is donating his evening because, he says, "being master of ceremonies for the CEF Spelling Bee is an opportunity for me to give." As a man who has sung in choral groups since college, has his own cable show, writes speeches, contributes as a writer to his firm's web page, is an auctioneer and past master of ceremonies, Detwiler feels his role that evening in the foundation's biggest annual fund raiser is right up his alley.

"If you came to me and said you were trying to raise $15,000 by holding bake sales, I'd think, 'that's a lot of cakes.' I don't know how effective I'd be making cakes. But, interacting with audiences, making eye contact, making people think and laugh is what I like to do. Philanthropy is one of my great interests and public education is a great, great cause," he said.

Having just returned from a trip to Romania with Betsey — Detwiler witnessed a spelling bee held by the students in the school he visited.

"It was thrilling to watch. And, because I had already been asked to be master of ceremonies for the CEF bee, I was thinking about the consequences of donating money for educational endeavors. The word inconsequential comes to mind. In writing a check for $250, which is approximately the amount for sponsoring a CEF spelling bee team, I could help a Romanian child go to high school for a whole year. Now the amount of $250 is inconsequential at this point in my life . . . it is more interesting to help someone else go to school," he said.

In arriving at becoming who he is today, Detwiler, originally from Hudson, N.Y., lost his mother at five months old and was raised by his grandmother in Brooklyn.

"My father tried to raise me," he said. "But, it was the Depression and he was selling milk door to door. He brought me to my grandmother, who became my biggest supporter and advocate, and gave me the ideals I have today. I was the first in my family to go to college. I learned to play the piano and took voice lessons, and, in looking back, realize that, because I wasn't born into a family with wealth, I took a lot. Now, I give back. Believe me, giving feels a lot better than taking."

It is difficult to contain your enthusiasm about life when speaking with Detwiler, whose passions lie primarily in his work and family members.

"I love life and all its elements. I can become easily overwhelmed emotionally. I remember saying to Betsey after our first child was born, 'I love him so much, how could I ever love more children after him?' But, I do. The love is unlimited."

As the father of five sons, Detwiler speaks of each, and their families, with the highest regard, using uncompromising principles when describing who they are and their life's work. One son works with him at Fechtor, Detwiler & Co., Inc.; another majored in third world development in college.

One story Detwiler told was of their son, Peter, who, with his wife and two sons, recently shopped for a patio set. Peter, he said, "has an unswerving allegiance to the environment, that is shared by his family.

"They found a set for $200 and asked the sales person if she knew how the wood was cut down. Their main concern was if it was harvested in an environmentally friendly manner. The sales person didn't know, and they continued their search. The next set was $350 and the sales person said it was harvested in a friendly way. After discussion, they opted to buy the set for $200, then, wrote a check for $150 and contributed it to a conservation group that is responsible for fostering the environmentally friendly harvesting of wood. Peter's firm matched the money, so it was a $300 contribution. Peter felt this was closer to the mark and truer to his feelings than buying wood that was purported to be harvested in a friendly way."

Christopher, their fourth son, has special needs, and 'the love of their life.' It is difficult for Detwiler to discuss Christopher, he said, but, simply, because of Christopher, they are dedicated to a 'special group of people.'

Detwiler describes his wife, Betsey, the proprietor of Buttonwood Books and Toys in Cohasset and Buttonwood Books for Kids in Hingham, as "a professional in every sense of the word, and probably the most well-read person I know."

"Actually," he laughed, "she'd be a shoe-in at the spelling bee. She reads three and four books a week."

Detwiler considers himself as aggressive and an optimist in the investment world. As an investment banker, he underwrites securities and raises money for small companies that are 'often overlooked and under loved.'

"The environment today has become dominated by mega companies, leaving the opportunity open to serve small, quality companies whose potential is strong, but whose return on investments may not come to fruition for several years. Successful investors know, however, that patience is key. I look at this type of investing as another opportunity to help people, give a leg up."

At 70 years old, Detwiler doesn't consider retiring any time soon, even though he loves the idea of getting more fishing in.

"I love my work. I love the change of the market day to day. I love riding the Hingham commuter boat into Boston each day. For years, I took the boat at the crack of dawn. I don't have to do that anymore. I now take the 8:30 a.m. boat. They have the best coffee and I enjoy the scenery. I read recycled papers. Coming home at the end of the day, I snooze, while my good friend, Jeff Powers from Cohasset, does crossword puzzles. He and I have been friends for 43 years."

Detwiler is looking forward to the CEF Sixth Annual Spelling Bee May 9.

"I'm what some know as a mensch," he said. "Big, burly, love-life type of person. I'll do a good job for the CEF. I'll have fun, and to make sure everyone else has fun. Raising money is never an easy job, but the idea of a spelling bee sounds like sure fun and a sure fund raiser to me."

For information regarding the Cohasset Education Foundation Sixth Annual Spelling Bee, please call Midge Stone at 383-2281 or Bernadette Faulkner at 383-6918. The foundation continues to welcome calls from those who wish to spell or sponsor a team or player.

Robert Detwiler will emcee the CEF spelling bee, May 9.

School bus drivers take issue with Collins' comments

Say claims of unreliability are unfair

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The school transportation system in Cohasset is a mess. That much everyone seems to agree on. At last Thursday's school committee meeting, school bus drivers said they would like to be part of the solution to a problem they have been unfairly targeted as contributing to.

At the April 6 school committee meeting, middle-high school principal Curtis Collins said part of the problem with transporting kids to athletic events was due to the unwillingness of bus drivers to travel long distances.

"We have some drivers who don't want to go over the Fore River Bridge and some who don't want to go to New Bedford," Collins said at the time. "We're not going to allow kids to drive all over creation because we can't expose people to the liability. We've had to cancel some things and that's crazy."

School bus drivers Peggy Litchfield, Julie Litchfield, Dama Dow, and Janet Figueiredo spoke in front of the school committee last week to dispute Collins' remarks and explain what they said were the inefficiencies in the system.

"To hold us responsible for a bus trip not being able to leave at 2 p.m. when there's a lack of equipment and personnel is extremely unfair," Peggy Litchfield said. "I'm very offended by Curt Collins' comments that we're unreliable. Every one of us has driven while us or our children have been sick. Dama is driving with a neck problem that requires cortisone shots. I've driven with a broken tailbone, and Janet's driving with a broken foot she hurt on the job. Does that sound unreliable to you?"

Litchfield said Collins' comment about drivers refusing to go great distances was off-base.

"It's absolutely untrue that drivers won't go on the long trips," Litchfield said. "We've all made trips to Boston, Rhode Island, the Cape, and, yes, even New Bedford."

Due to the problems in the transportation department, superintendent Edward Malvey solicited bids from companies interested in taking over the operation of the department. Malvey received the bids in early April, with the lowest bid coming in $15,000 above what the school department currently spends on transportation.

> — School bus driver Peggy Litchfield

Litchfield said she would like to see the transportation system stay in-house, allowing all the drivers to keep their jobs, but said improvements in the department are badly needed.

"We agree that the transportation system is ineffective," she said. "If substitute drivers were paid a higher stipend or given health benefits, the system might run more efficiently. One substitute driver made herself unavailable to us because her health benefits were taken away because she didn't work enough hours. I'd be interested to see how her benefits compared with the money that's been spent on overtime and paying outside contractors to drive."

School committee chairman Pat Martin said the department's transportation is a problem which needs to be addressed, but said a lack of available funds is compounding the difficulty.

"We agree that the system needs a complete overhaul," Martin said. "This issue is similar to many facing the Cohasset school district because of the tightness of the budget. The dollars are stretched very thin."

Litchfield said she was surprised by the fact that no one from the school department has asked bus drivers about how the system might be improved. She said those closest to the situation have the best understanding of what the problems are.

"I think there are a lot of misconceptions about us," she said. "We're not these mindless robots who just drive, drive, drive. My Osgood kids, I help them with their homework and quiz them on their spelling. We're like a referee and teacher as well as a driver. We are the lowest paid bus drivers in the area and I was actually told by a veteran teacher that we should be at the beck and call of the school department. It adds insult to injury."

High school junior Kelly Stone, a student liaison to the school committee, said she was disgusted by such a lack of respect for the bus drivers.

"I'm totally appalled by that," Stone said. "I remember being on the bus, seeing fights, and the drivers having to break them up. I really empathize with you."

School committee member Rick Flynn said bus drivers should not have to tolerate unruly behavior from any student.

"It's a privilege to get a ride on a school bus, not a right," Flynn said. "You shouldn't have to put up with any nonsense from anyone. I'm glad you came forward."

Litchfield said she loves driving Cohasset's schoolchildren and said she and her fellow drivers would simply like a little respect for the job they do.

"One day, Marilee Cantelmo handed me a carnation and said 'Thank you for being one of Osgood's teachers'" Litchfield said. "My eyes welled up, because she was the first one to recognize what it is we do."

Natural cures for what ails you

Special program is May 17

By Cory Tromblee
STAFF WRITER

For more than 18 years Genevieve Lane has been practicing traditional Chinese medicine to heal human ailments.

Lane is a true believer in the connection between mind, body and spirit, and has made her life's work out of trying to help people find connections within.

"I recognize the wholeness of each individual and work with each patient to resolve the imbalances and distortions brought about by the stresses of daily living," she says. "Our bodies have an innate capacity to heal — given the proper stimulation and guidance.

"We don't just see the stomach ulcer or the infertility or whatever it may be that a person is suffering from," Lane says. "That's exactly where Western medicine fails."

Later this month Lane will share her expertise with Cohasset. The Social Service League is sponsoring a free program featuring Lane from 7:30 to 9 p.m., Wednesday, May 17 at St. Anthony's Parish Center.

By treating the whole individual, rather than focusing in on a particular problem and trying to cure it, Lane and other natural healers create a definite separation between themselves and regular doctors. She admitted there is no replacing some of the amazing treatments offered in Western medicine, especially for helping trauma patients.

"I want to compliment Western medicine, not replace it," she said.

Since she moved her business to Norwell in 1998, Lane has been slowly completing the construction of the Genevieve Lane Natural Healing Center which resides quietly behind Rietzl Audi on Route 228. And now that it's finished, she says business is in full swing.

"I want to compliment western medicine, not replace it."
— Genevieve Lane

The healing center offers various types of treatments for people who want to experiment with new pathways in health. Currently it offers acupuncture, massage, traditional Chinese herbal medicine, Homeopathy, magnet therapy, therapeutic skin care, Reiki, whole health education, Acupressure Shiatsu, nutrition and cooking classes, as well as other things.

She is looking to include and work with a "western" doctor at some point in the future. Currently she has several treatment rooms, a lobby and an area for meditation, Tai Chi, and yoga.

Lane said the goal of most of her programs is to help people tap their vital energy and align themselves with "Natural Law." In turn, it is believed that this fosters healing and good health.

She explained Chinese medicine briefly as a study in chi — the natural, electromagnetic energy possessed by each human, which is connected throughout the organs and along the nerves and "meridians" in the body.

"It's not just medicine. It's art, it's culture, it's everything," she said. "It was always a medicine of observation," she said. Unlike western practices, where they essentially learn by studying cadavers and animals, Chinese medicine gained all its insights through the study of living human beings.

Practitioners treat anything from stress and depression to fertility, respiratory and digestive problems, and even acute and chronic illness. They also treat trauma. She said some patients come in for regular treatments to relax and help maintain good health, others come in to help deal with more catastrophic problems such as cancer.

"Some people only understand Chinese medicine in terms of pain relief — not true," she says.

The problem is that under many health care plans many of these treatments aren't covered. Lane hopes that because many people are beginning to see the virtues of these types of medicines that that will soon change. And with more regular doctors getting interested in the movement, she is very hopeful.

Currently she's charging $60 for acupuncture, $60 for massage, and $25 for whole health education. Initial visits to the healing center cost $125. That includes a comprehensive evaluation, in which you are evaluated for about 1-1/2 hours for acupuncture, herbal medicine and homeopathy. Within the initial visit there is also the possibility of a first acupuncture treatment.

In her line of medicine, people have to want to change their lives through these practices. Lane and her co-workers can only gently guide people towards change.

"Managing Stress and Pain with Natural Healing," a free program featuring Genevieve Lane, a practitioner of traditional Chinese medicine, will take place from 7:30 to 9 p.m., Wednesday, May 17 at St. Anthony's Parish Center. Lane will speak on restoring body balance and wellness through acupuncture, herbal medicine, massage therapy, homeopathy and Reiki. Refreshments will be service. The parish center is handicap accessible. The event is sponsored by the Social Service League of Cohasset and the Cohasset Board of Health. For more information, call 383-0771.

POLICE BRIEFS

Radar unit

Thanks to a $3,500 state Community Policing Grant, Cohasset police have a new handheld, laser radar gun.

"It's completely portable and small enough to put on the bikes," Safety Officer Rick Yocum said.

The radar gun will help police catch speeders, Yocum said. The officer looks through the view finder, puts the red dot on the car and pulls the trigger, he explained. The laser locks on the car from as far away as 4,000 feet.

"It's a nice little tool," Yocum said. He added that with additional software the radar gun can be used to help in accident investigations and traffic studies.

Rte. 3A accidents

Two drivers were cited following accidents on Route 3A last week.

A 30-year-old Scituate man travelling northbound on 3A was cited for failure to yield to oncoming traffic after he turned left onto Beechwood Street at the lights at about 12:36 p.m. on April 27. The pickup he was driving hit a Nissan sedan that was travelling southbound along the inside lane, Safety Officer Richard Yocum said. There were no injuries.

In an earlier incident, a 16-year-old Cohasset resident, who was on his way to school, was cited for failure to use care following an accident at about 8 a.m. April 25 at the intersection of 3A and Pond Street.

The teen, who was driving a 1995 Ford sedan, hit a car waiting at the light on 3A that started a chain reaction "fender-bender" involving a total of four cars.

Two of the operators went to South Shore Hospital complaining of back and neck injuries, Yocum said.

Arrests after disturbance

Police arrested five youths following a disturbance at Mobil Mart at about 11:30 p.m. Saturday. The clerk told police that the parties left in a black car. Police stopped the car at 3A and lower King Street and found alcohol in the vehicle, officer Garrett Hunt said.

Arrested and charged with minor carrying/transporting alcohol were: Joshua A. McLaughlin, 17, of Quincy; Justin J. Quinlan, 18, of Quincy; Samantha M. Wilson, 17 of Wakefield; Angelique G. Previte, 19, of Malden and a 16-year-old juvenile.

Youths arrested at Sandy Beach

Police on routine patrol arrested five Cohasset minors at Sandy Beach Saturday afternoon and charged them with minors transporting/carrying alcohol.

Safety Officer Rick Yocum said the youths had a 30-pack of beer. They also cut up Coke and Sprite soft drink cans and wrapped them around some of the open beer cans to disguise the contents, Yocum said.

Arrested were: Carolyn W. Cameron, 18, of 274 Forest Ave.; Kevin L. DeVito, 18, of 439 King St.; Travis W. Moore, 17, of 193 Sohier St.; Andrew T. McAuliffe, 18 of 34 Fernway; and Daniel S. Mulligan, 17, of 27 Ledgewood Dr. Moore was also charged with possession of Class D (marijuana).

CHL fights back against zoning change

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The owner of the Cohasset Heights Limited landfill, Paul Barry, is on the offensive against a zoning change that effectively prohibits any landfill from operating along the section of Route 3A where CHL is located. Barry's attorney has written a letter to the Massachusetts Attorney General's office asking it to nullify the zoning change.

The zoning change was approved at last month's annual town meeting. Article 16 changed the zoning along a section of Route 3A from light industrial to technology business. John K. McNabb Jr., Vice President of the anti-landfill group Stop Any Further Expansion (SAFE) wrote the article, which was approved by a vote of 151 to 68 at town meeting. McNabb said SAFE is preparing to send a response to the AG's office urging it to reject Barry's request.

In a letter dated April 15, 2000, Barry's nephew, Attorney Robert Schwandt, is urging the AG's office to nullify the zoning change. "John McNabb and other members of the environmental group SAFE fought for years to close, and continue to fight against the expansion of, a private landfill operated in the light industrial zone at issue," Schwandt wrote to the AG's office. "The zoning changes proposed in Article 16 at the 2000 Town Meeting and article 21 at the 1999 Town Meeting are strictly attempts to further this cause."

Voters rejected Article 21 at the 1999 Annual Town Meeting. Article 21 attempted to create a highway district in the same zone that was changed to technology business last month. Schwandt claims that Article 16 from the 2000 Annual Town Meeting is nothing more than a re-write of Article 21 from the 1999 Annual Town Meeting. By state law, any zoning change that fails to pass at a town meeting cannot be re-submitted for two years.

> "Although the language in Article 21 from the 1999 Annual Town Meeting is not identical to the language in Article 16 from the 2000 meeting, the proposals had the same express purpose of preventing solid waste uses in this area."
> — Robert Schwandt, CHL attorney

"Although the language in Article 21 from the 1999 Annual Town Meeting is not identical to the language in Article 16 from the 2000 meeting, the proposals had the same express purpose of preventing solid waste uses in this area," Schwandt wrote. "Similar articles proposing to change the zoning status of this area were also submitted at the 1991 Special Town Meeting and the 1996 Special Town Meeting by many of the same proponents of the articles at the 1999 and 2000 meetings. This continuous effort to re-zone this area is further evidence that the two most recent articles are essentially the same with the same objective."

Schwandt said McNabb stated at the 2000 Town Meeting that the primary reason for proposing Article 16 was to prevent solid waste uses in the zone along Route 3A.

Also, Schwandt added that article 16 should be overturned because it violates a state law preventing towns from prohibiting landfills in industrial zones except to protect drinking water recharge areas, wetlands and zones of contribution to certain water supplies (groundwater). If a landfill has all its necessary permits and sits in an industrial zone, towns cannot prohibit the siting or expansion of such a facility.

Towns can impose restrictions on landfills for the express purpose of protecting recharge areas, wetlands and groundwater. Legally, these restrictions can have the incidental effect of prohibiting landfills. Schwandt said article 16 does not meet these criteria.

"Cohasset's Technology Business Zone bylaw is not of general application and it does not have the incidental effect of prohibiting solid waste facilities," Schwandt said. "Rather, its specific purpose is to prohibit solid waste facilities."

Sandra R. Giordano, a paralegal for the Municipal Law Unit of the AG's office, acknowledged receipt of Schwandt's letter. Giordano said the letter and its objections would become part of the formal review when the AG's office considers whether article 16 is legal under state law.

The New Blue Revue - Mission From God will perform May 20 at the Purple Eggplant in Abington.

'Soul men'

Braintree man fronts Blues Brothers tribute band

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

They have the act nailed, right down to the sound of the music, the dark shades, hats, and erratic dancing.

In essence, they are The Blues Brothers. Headed by Bob Romano of Braintree, the tribute band known as MISSION FROM GOD is shakin' things up locally.

MISSION FROM GOD is essentially two bands in one. When they perform, they open for themselves under the name of the New Blue Revue. Then, with the addition of a saxophonist, the New Blue Revue transforms into MISSION FROM GOD for the second set. To close out a given evening, the band again returns to its New Blue Revue format.

"We didn't want to be just another blues band," said New Blue Review/MISSION FROM GOD front-man Bob Romano. Romano noted in the context of the Blues Brothers cover band, he plays the character of Elwood, and fellow band mate Bobby Dutczak plays the character of Jake.

Romano said he plays harmonica, Dutczak sings, and an extravagant back-up band jams out the music with amazing accuracy.

For those who aren't familiar with the Blues Brothers, they were two characters invented by comedians Dan Akroyd and John Belushi for Saturday Night Live. Jake and Elwood are two renegade blues musicians on the run from the law. The 1980 film "The Blues Brothers" was a box office smash and since its release has had a sort of cult following.

And while MISSION FROM GOD has only performed three times, they too are gaining a following.

Romano said the idea of forming the band was the result of a lot of work within the music business over the years.

Bobby "Dutty" Dutczak (bass, vocals), Bob "Satch" Romano (guitar, vox), Robert "Scoop" Davis (drums), Stevie "Ray" Denney (guitar, vox) and Artie Allsopp (keyboards). Not pictured is "Slick" Jim Murray (guitar, vocals)

Romano has a background in music. He played in several bands during high school and college.

Romano kept his hand in the business selling cassettes and CD's at the Record Town store he owned in Plymouth's Cordage Park ten years ago. During his time in the business, Romano began collecting Beatles memorabilia. It was at that time he found he wanted to try to get back into the mainstream music business.

"I put on several Beatle's memorabilia shows," Romano said, adding he used to talk about all the Beatles items he possessed on radio stations like WBCN in Boston.

While Romano worked with the people at WBCN, he met a band called Street Kid, which eventually asked Romano to mange the band.

Romano took the job. While he worked with Street Kid, his travels took him to the Yard Rock club in Quincy, where he became friendly with Dutczak.

Eventually, Romano said he started booking gigs at the Yard Rock, and began working to get himself back into performing.

In 1990, Romano said his record store "went under," so that gave him an excuse to further dedicate himself to his new musical ambitions.

"I decided to start my own blues jam," Romano said. He added he had always wanted to start a "true open (microphone) night where anybody could come up onstage and jam." Many open mike nights at the time were limited regarding who could come up onstage, Romano said. Through his open mike nights, Romano met and jammed with some of the people he now calls bandmates.

In 1996, Romano founded the New Blue Revue with Arthur "Chickie" Deptule (bass), "Dutty" Dutczak (bass guitar, vocals), Robert "Scoop" Davis (Drums), Stevie "Ray" Denney (guitar, vocals), Slick Jim Murray (guitar, vocals), and Artie Allsopp (keyboards).

"We do everything they do, from the speeches to the music. The act includes a lot of improvisation and dance routines, so it's not just about recreating the music. It's about recreating the whole experience. It's also very interactive with the audience."
Bob Romano of MISSION FROM GOD

Romano said the band features all the members of New Blue Revue, except Deptule takes the lead on bass in that band's context. In addition, Dutczak takes on lead vocals while Romano remains playing harmonica. Also, MISSION FROM GOD features saxophonist Anthony Matthews.

"MISSION FROM GOD is a Weymouth Landing MISSION FROM GOD is branching out and playing other local venues.

The Blues Brothers angle has an interesting history.

It was a fateful night that Romano was sitting around with his kids watching the Blues Brothers original movie. Romano said he got lost in the film's music and also its plot. He had always been a big fan of the film, but an idea crossed his mind. He wanted to emulate it.

"While I was watching the movie I said to myself, 'I could do this,'" Romano said. "So, I started doing research on the Internet. I wanted to find out if there was already a Blues Brothers cover band out there."

Romano found that there were limited numbers of Blues Brothers cover bands, but he found there were none on the east coast.

"At the same time, I knew tribute bands were a huge thing," he added, noting the success of tribute bands like Draw The Line, who cover the music of Aersomith.

And so, Romano started downloading Blues Brothers information and song lyrics. He presented the concept to the New Blue Revue, and the members loved it.

"We did a lot of research to get this far," Romano said. "And I had to get a lot of good musicians to play with. Now, we want to get into playing private parties and corporate functions. We're really looking forward to this thing taking off. It's really just one big party, and we have a lot of fun with it."

MISSION FROM GOD's New Blue Revue's next gig is May 20 at The Purple Eggplant in Abington. They will also be playing on May 27 at the Ranch House in Marshfield. For more information on dates or booking call Romano at (877) 221-6199.

The Divine Egg Salad Sandwich

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

We have all had the worst-case egg salad sandwich in elementary school. You know the one. It comes wrapped in waxed paper, the bread is soggy, and the mashed egg filling is thin, damp, and lifeless, with nary a hint of contrast in texture or flavor. A good cook knows that hard-cooked eggs are so rich that a really good egg salad sandwich becomes a balancing act, a recipe which cries out for a bit of chew and zest to lift this usually pedestrian American icon into the ranks of the truly divine.

The starting point is, of course, how to hard-cook the eggs. I was looking for a cooked yet creamy yolk, a firm but not rubbery white, no green discoloration where the two meet, and a reliable peeling method. The first method was to add the eggs to a saucepan of cold water, bring it to a simmer or boil, and cook for 5 to 15 minutes depending on the recipe. This method was good but maintaining a simmer was difficult and when I used a boil, at least one of the eggs would end up with a cracked shell. I then gently dropped eggs into boiling water and cooked them for 10 to 20 minutes. The problem with this method is that not all of the eggs cook perfectly since they don't go into the water at the same time and they are not removed at exactly the same time either. When using boiling water, one minute either way makes a big difference. The last method, one recommended by the American Egg Board, Julia Child, and Cook's Illustrated, is to start the eggs in cold water bring it to a simmer, take the saucepan off the heat and allow it to rest for 10 to 20 minutes. Julia suggests a resting time of 17 minutes but I found – as did the Cook's Illustrated test kitchen – that 10 minutes was ideal. The longer cooking time produced eggs with a green tinge around the yolk. This method works no matter how many eggs you're cooking or how big your saucepan is as long as the eggs are in one layer and covered by at least one inch of water.

Now I needed to find the best method for peeling hard-cooked eggs. All cooks know that some eggs peel easily and others don't. I have heard all sorts of theories about the age of eggs being the determining factor (older eggs start to dry out and shrink inside the shell, thus they are supposed to be easier to peel), but that doesn't account for why a dozen eggs in the same supermarket carton don't all behave in exactly the same manner. I tried adding baking soda and vinegar to the water but the best method was one used by Cook's Illustrated – the cooked egg is cooled in iced water and then the egg is rolled on a hard surface (to crack the shell). Start peeling from the wide end, where there is often an air pocket, and the peel should come off easily.

Next, I wanted a good method for chopping and mashing the cooked, peeled eggs that would not produce pasty yolks but would yield whites that were evenly diced. A sharp thin knife works well and it is worth just a bit of time and attention to get this right. (You can buy egg slicers – I think they are sold to slice soft cheeses – which have widely-spaced wires. You can use these for dicing by making three passes: end to end, top to bottom, and then side to side.)

Now that the eggs were chopped, I tried different types of binders. I tested yogurt, sour cream, cream cheese, buttermilk, homemade mayonnaise, and the store-bought variety. Mayonnaise was the clear winner and I preferred the supermarket brand (in my case, Hellman's) to the homemade variety, which was too rich. The ideal quantity was a mere 1/4 cup mayonnaise combined with six diced eggs. Too much mayo creates a slippery, oozing filling which squirts out the sides of the sandwich.

What about cutting through the thick, creamy taste of egg salad? One teaspoon of Dijon mustard was just the thing; two teaspoons, even 1 1/2 teaspoons, was too much of a good thing. Next I tried several members of the onion family: red onion, green onion, shallots, and chives. My favorites were the shallots and chives. They added a fresh bite while I found the green and red onions to be too strong for this dish. Two tablespoons ended up to be the best amount for the shallot and one tablespoon for the chives. Although celery does add crunch, I actually preferred the salad without it. However, this is up to you. Since eggs cry out for salt, I thought that anchovies, capers, and/or olives might be worth testing. My clear favorite was chopped capers.

A great egg salad sandwich contains more than bread and egg salad. Either watercress or arugula is essential to add texture and flavor. Two slices of crisp bacon (forget soggy, greasy bacon) are also a must. It is important to add these last ingredients separately as the sandwich is being made rather than mixing them in with the egg salad itself. (I tried this and after two hours, the combination was downright nasty looking.)

THE DIVINE EGG SALAD SANDWICH

Dicing the eggs is important for a really good sandwich. Also, don't leave out the greens and crisp bacon – they are essential counterparts to the rich filling. You can use just one, two, or all three of the flavoring ingredients - shallot, chives, and capers – but the recipe is best with all three.

6 large eggs
4 tablespoons mayonnaise
1 teaspoon Dijon mustard
2 tablespoons finely chopped shallot and/or
1 tablespoon finely chopped chives and/or
2 tablespoons chopped capers (small capers don't need chopping)
Freshly ground black pepper to taste
8 slices country white bread
2 cups watercress or arugula or enough to make a layer on 4 slices of the bread
8 slices bacon fried until crispy and brown

1. Place the eggs in a medium saucepan and cover with cool or cold water to cover by about 1 inch. Bring to a boil over medium-high heat. Remove from heat, cover and let sit for 10 minutes. Transfer the eggs to a bowl of cold water into which several ice cubes have been added and allow to sit for 5 minutes. Dry eggs. One at a time tap the entire surface of each egg on a countertop. Roll the egg on the counter to further crack the shell. Starting at the air-pocket end (the thick end), peel the shell from the egg. If the peeling is difficult, peel under cold running water. Cut eggs into 1/4-inch dice.

2. Combine all , except bread, watercress, and bacon, in a medium bowl. (May be refrigerated overnight.)

3. Lay 4 slices of bread onto a work surface. Place a layer of greens onto each of the slices and top with 2 slices of bacon. (Break each piece of bacon in half and lay the 4 halves in a row on the greens.) Evenly spread 1/4 of the egg salad onto each sandwich. Top with the remaining slices of bread.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

Most people are already familiar with astrological sun signs – those presumed indicators of personality and future. There are, however, much more telling influences, as anyone who has studied astrology knows.

I try to do something a little different with my astrological forecasts. I like to compare astrology with meteorology. Just as meteorologists predict the physical weather – if there will be sun or precipitation – an astrologer can forecast the mental and emotional weather ahead.

A meteorologist tells you whether to bring an umbrella or sunglasses to work. By charting the course of the heavens and the various effects of celestial spheres on the human condition, I can tell you what type of day we are likely to have and how

WEDNESDAY, MAY 3

The stage is set for this month's new moon, when the moon enters Taurus at 12:54 a.m. This is a day to tie up loose ends and clear the way for new beginnings. Lunar alignments to Mercury and Neptune aid imagination and creativity. You may experience breakthroughs and discover new ways to express yourself. Be sure to spend time alone; look within for answers. The planet Mars moves into Gemini at 3:19 p.m., remaining there until June 16.

THURSDAY, MAY 4

The new moon culminates at 12:12 a.m., 14-degrees of Taurus. At 11:07 a.m. the moon becomes inactive, when it aligns with Uranus. Be flexible; expect the unexpected. Sleep on new ideas and don't take action until tomorrow. Take extra time out for favorite sports, hobbies and friends.

FRIDAY, MAY 5

The moon enters dualistic Gemini at 2:23 a.m., setting a quick pace today and tomorrow. An applying 90-degree alignment of Venus and Neptune continues to highlight all creative endeavors and may inspire new insights. On the other hand, you should avoid making major purchases or long-term commitments. The evening is prime for social activities, romantic encounters.

SATURDAY, MAY 6

Current planetary influences point to an exciting social weekend. You can initiate new activities before 12:01 p.m., when the Gemini moon forms its last major alignment to a planet and becomes inactive. If you have work projects to accomplish, handle a variety of small jobs rather than one that demands mental focus and precision. Don't be a hermit tonight. Gather with friends and let the good times roll.

SUNDAY, MAY 7

The moon enters the family-oriented sign Cancer at 3:14 a.m. An applying alignment of the sun and Jupiter generates an upbeat mood. However, the planet Neptune takes center stage and makes this a day to kick back. Put domestic or career worries on the back burner; don't take anything or anyone too seriously. Concentrate on relaxing and recharging your batteries.

MONDAY, MAY 8

It may take a little longer than usual for the morning fog to burn off. Neptune actually begins retrograde travel at 8:30 a.m., 6 1/2-degrees Aquarius. Don't take on more than you can handle. The Cancer moon continues active travel until 12:31 p.m., when it interacts with Saturn. Alignments of Mercury/Jupiter and the sun/Mercury occur in the afternoon and evening. All communications are highlighted. Open your mind to new possibilities.

TUESDAY, MAY 9

The moon enters Leo at 5:01 a.m., remaining there today and tomorrow. However, the planets Mercury, Saturn and Uranus take the spotlight. Avoid rigid schedules; be flexible. Stop, look and listen. Don't jump to conclusions or act on impulse. Rather than starting new ventures, plan to get old business out of the way today. Keep a low profile. Meditate for inner peace and wisdom.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 10

Conflicting planetary influences make for another challenging day. Keep a cool head. Go with the flow. The Leo moon continues active travel until 8:11 p.m., when it aligns with Mercury. The first quarter phase of the moon occurs at 4:00 p.m. The sun aligns with Saturn and Uranus just as Mercury did yesterday. This influence brings up the same theme. You must find a balance between personal freedom and responsibilities you have taken on. Take extra quiet time out for yourself. Through prayer and meditation you will gain deep, penetrating insights and find new solutions.

Dancing for a cure

Dance Workshop of Hanover to sponsor cancer benefit on May 7

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

As dance recitals go, the May 7 performance by students in the Dance Workshop of Hanover is pretty significant. For the past 15 years the local dance school has sponsored a benefit performance for a very worthwhile cause. This year dancers will pirouette for to raise money for cancer research. The dancers are part of the Childrens Dance Ensemble , a group of students who have graduated from The Dance Workshop.

Dance Workshop founder and director MaryLou Cunningham has been training dancers and supporting causes for more than a quarter of a century. Her school instructs student in all facets of dance and performance including jazz, ballet and tap.

Some of the organizations which have benefited in the past from the Childrens Dance Ensemble performances include homeless veterans groups in Boston, the American Heart Association, and other health-related groups.

The ensemble's May 7 performance at Hanover High School will be for the benefit of children's cancer research. Cunningham said the performance is also in memory of a student of hers who died of cancer approximately four years ago.

Cunningham said this year, the Childrens Dance Ensemble is comprised of 14 students from ages 12-18. This year's benefit performance was partly choreographed by a former student of Cunningham's named Amy Johnson, who currently is attending Simmons College in Boston.

"Doing these kinds of performances really gives these girls a sense of accomplishment. It shows their dedication and shows that they really love what they're doing. And it's all for a good cause."
Wanda Cunningham

"She was my student for years," Cunningham said fondly. "She was the decision maker for this performance."

Cunningham said the 14 students in this year's show were selected from 43 applicants. They will perform several pieces, including numbers set to classical music and jazz as well.

Cunningham's daughter Wanda, who also works at the dance studio, said the hour and a half performance will include dancers from two other local studios —Dance Time in Rockland and the Dance Studio of Braintree.

"Doing these kinds of performances really gives these girls a sense of accomplishment," Wanda added. "It shows their dedication and shows that they really love what they're doing. And it's all for a good cause."

The performance will take place at Hanover High School on May 7 at 4 p.m.. Tickets for the show cost $8 for adults and $4 for children and senior citizens. For more information on the show and donation information call (781) 878-9852.

Education + career = Portman

Young actress balances college and Hollywood

By Ed Symkus
GNG SENIOR ARTS WRITER

It's been quite a ride for Natalie Portman since she made the decision to cut back on making films after "Star Wars: Episode I — The Phantom Menace" in order to concentrate on a college education. Yes, she went to college — an Ivy League school she'd not name, but which has a yard in which one can park one's car — but she also made two more movies: "Anywhere But Here" and her latest, "Where the Heart Is." In the former, she played opposite Susan Sarandon, the mom with whom she made a cross-country road trip. In the latter she has the film's lead role, a young, very pregnant Tennessee girl named Novalee Nation who's abandoned by her redneck boyfriend in a WalMart parking lot shortly after they head out on a cross-country road trip.

"I really never thought about it as carrying the film," says the perky Portman about her star turn. "Although Novalee is probably the character around which the story is based, I don't see her as the lead. There's so many other great characters in the film, she's just kind of the one that ties it all together. I think of it much more as an ensemble film than as my movie."

Portman has had a history of saying no to projects that have sometimes turned into juicy roles for others. Rejections in recent years have included "Romeo + Juliet," "Lolita," "The Ice Storm" and "The Horse Whisperer." She took the part in "Where the Heart Is" because she liked the fact that it was sort of a fable.

"It's kind of an enhanced reality, it's got a fantasy aspect to it," she explains. "There's a moral line that runs through it. And I also appreciated the sweetness behind it. It's good-natured and well-meaning, and you don't find that much in movies today. Movies today would rather be like, 'Oh look at this dysfunctional family and how screwed up everyone gets from it.' And this is a look at how you can transcend what life hands you."

In the story, Novalee literally moves into an Oklahoma WalMart, has her baby there, then becomes a local celebrity and part of a loose-knit "family" of oddball rural folks, the type that are often described as trailer park trash.

"I kind of had this caricature in my mind that was made much more real by actually being among people when we were shooting in the trailer park and you see that these were real people, not what you'd see on Jerry Springer," she says. "They're people with lives, who dress like I do, who talk like I do and who are born into a situation where they can't afford to have a house without wheels under it."

This was a film that Portman approached with anticipation, quite the opposite of the way she was thinking when she played Queen Amidala in "The Phantom Menace."

"I really expected [fan reaction] to be like completely overwhelming," she says. "I was imagining myself walking down the street and being mobbed and not being able to go anywhere alone anymore. But it's not like that at all. I have pretty much anonymity, and it really hasn't changed from before I did 'Star Wars.' If anything I got recognized a little more, like maybe once a week now."

There's still a bit of nervousness in her voice when she talks about this, probably because she's gearing up to head for Australia this summer where she'll begin filming the next installment of George Lucas' ongoing epic, and will do a third one in two more years. It's not the travel that causes that hint of anxiety, it's that "Star Wars" connection and the possibility that her anonymity really might go away after the next one. Travel is something she's quite used to, since Israel is a regular destination.

"I was born there but left when I was 3," she says. "I used to go two or three times a year but now that I'm in school it's a little more difficult. I think I'm pretty divided because I've grown up as an American, but I really feel lucky to have the identity that's given to me by knowing where I'm from and where my people are from. I feel a sense of belonging in Israel, whereas in the United States I feel very comfortable. This is the culture I know much better, but I don't really feel like I necessarily belong here."

Yet Portman does feel that she belongs in college. She's said in the past that she'd rather be smart than be a movie star, but now believes that she can be both.

"I think that you can be smart without going to college," she insists. "I just think that I couldn't be smart without going to college. I would feel gypped if I didn't get the opportunity to go and explore and it's such an amazing experience to have access to these huge sources of knowledge, just be around people my age who are brilliant."

Portman is currently studying psychology, after taking chemistry, literature and Hebrew last semester. And she's not at all embarrassed about admitting that the college experience is difficult.

"I thought it was going to be like the hardest week in high school," she says. "But it's not. When you get like 500 pages of reading a week, minimum, plus papers and tests, you get a lot more respect for everyone who's gone through this. I'm awful with getting enough sleep, but I'm good at working at 2 in the morning. That's good, but then I have to go to class at 8 a.m."

She says that the reason she doesn't want to name the school she's attending, and why she's registered there under her grandmother's maiden name, is that she doesn't want any visitors.

"I've talked to people who handled Brooke Shields when she was at school and they said she had hundreds of visitors a year. I haven't said where I'm at school. I don't want to advertise. People might know where I am but I'm not confirming anything because it's important enough to me not to publicize it."

She's also not finding any time — or really shows much interest — in becoming active in the school's theater department.

"That's not why I was let into this school and I don't think they expect anything from me," she says. "If I was some athlete and they admitted me so I'd be on their team, I think they'd be pissed off. But I was not admitted in order to work in their theater program, and you do not get solicited by programs at school unless you go out and look for them."

When she does take the time to get back in front of the cameras, she finds that things have changed in the few years since she made her debut in "The Professional."

"It's become work," she says. "When I was little, it was more like a game. People treat you differently when you're little. They try to make it more fun because they are trying to elicit a certain performance from you that they don't think you're capable of because you're younger. And when you're older, they just kind of expect it from you. So it's not as much of a game and it's more work. But of all the work you can do, I still think it's a pretty fun and great one."

"Where the Heart Is" opens nationally on April 28.

A very pregnant Natalie Portman can't seem to remember where her boyfriend left the car.

ASHI provides advice on choosing a home inspector

As the saying goes, the home is where the heart is. It is not, however, a place where you want to find a lot of heartache. That is why it is so important for homebuyers to choose a qualified home inspector, according to Richard H. Clough of Concord, N.H., executive director of the New England Chapter of the American Society of Home Inspectors (ASHI).

"With the increasing demand for home inspectors today, it is important for homeowners to locate the best home inspector to examine their home," said Clough, whose organization accepts inspectors, who meet certain technical and professional requirements. "Homeowners often are not aware of the professional qualifications and experience requisites to consider when choosing a home inspector."

Several of these important aspects homeowners need to consider when choosing a home inspector may include obtaining several estimates, locating an inspector who is a member of a reputable organization such as ASHI, and ensuring that the home inspector has a wide range of experience in the industry. Price should not necessarily be the primary deciding factor.

Putting experience to work

Clough says a qualified home inspector is a generalist who knows how a home's many systems and components work together and how they stand the test of time. Professional home inspectors are familiar with every major aspect of a house When selecting a home inspector, make sure they will inspect the following major areas as outlined in the ASHI Standards of Practice:

- Structure—including basements and crawl spaces
- Exterior Surfaces-including siding, decks and grading of soil
- Roof Coverings
- Plumbing Systems
- Electric Systems
- Heating and Air Conditioning Systems
- Interior Surfaces and Components
- Insulation and Ventilation
- Fireplaces and Chimneys

Qualifying the Home Inspector

The American Society of Home Inspectors was founded in 1976 as a not-for-profit association of home inspectors whose objectives include promotion of excellence within the profession and continual improvements of its members' inspection services to the public. Clough explained that ASHI's requirements for full member status are rigorous and include

- Experience-Performance of at least 250 paid home inspections and a review of sample reports to verify compliance with the ASHI Standards of Practice.
- Knowledge-Current requirements call for the successful completion of two written exams that test the applicant's knowledge of building systems and components, report writing, the ASHI Standards of Practice, and the diagnosis of building defects.

Once granted membership, ASHI members are expected to continue their education. They are required to earn 60 membership renewal credits every three years in order to keep current with new technology and building practices

Their professional capability is measured against ASHI's Standards of Practice, recognized nationally as the benchmark of performance in the home inspection profession. Furthermore, ASHI's Code of Ethics helps protect consumers from potential conflicts of interest by prohibiting inspectors from recommending specific contractors for repairs or doing any repairs themselves in homes they inspect.

There is a lot of comfort for homebuyers in knowing they have made an educated decision about their home inspection By choosing an inspector who is truly qualified, the consumer can rest assured that there will be much less heartache with their purchase

For more information

Homebuyers who wish to know more about the American Society of Home Inspectors or obtain names of ASHI members near them, may call New England Chapter offices in Concord, N.H. at (603) 228-1231 during normal business hours or visit its website at www ashi-newengland org.

Jim Sweeney joins Conway Financial Services

Jim Sweeney

Jim Sweeney recently joined Conway Financial Services as a mortgage specialist, and is now handling the financing needs of customers in Jack Conway and Company's real estate offices in Quincy and South Boston.

Prior to joining CFS, Sweeney was an originator with People's Mortgage, an affiliate of People's Savings Bank in Brockton, for five years; he owned and operated three real estate sales offices for 15 years before that.

"Buying real estate is the biggest and best step someone will take for their future," he said. "It is very rewarding to be a part of that process."

A Carver resident, Sweeney has two sons, Brandon and Jordan, and a daughter, Katherine. He is a member of the American Legion, a paramedic and enjoys scuba diving in his spare time.

His 20 years' experience in the business makes Sweeney a familiar face in real estate circles. Those he's helped in the past frequently refer their friends and business associates to him — a hallmark of success in any profession — and he treats those customers as trusted friends.

"I know I've done a good job when people are calling me because someone referred them," Sweeney said. "It's nice to know that customers appreciate good service."

Conway Financial Services is the financing arm of Jack Conway and Company, and maintains correspondent lending relationships with some of the top lenders in the East. Founded in 1957, Jack Conway and Company is the largest independently owned real estate firm in Massachusetts, with more than 600 agents in 36 offices from Boston to Cape Cod.

For more information, call Sweeney at (781) 681-9400 or (888) 831-1181.

MainSpring House Charity Open golf tournament set for June 8

It's that time of year again — time to hit the links for a day of fun and excitement at the 16th annual charity golf tournament to benefit Brockton's MainSpring House homeless shelter. Jack Conway and Company Realtors, the tournament sponsor, has announced that this year's fundraiser will be held Thursday, June 8, at the Easton Country Club.

Contributors may sponsor a hole for $250, a tee or a green for $125, a cart for $50, or can donate raffle prizes as a way to participate in the event, said Denis Lilla, Conway's vice president of sales. To participate, golfers donate $90, which includes the cost of the greens fee, golf cart, a luncheon buffet and tournament prizes.

Since 1985, Conway's annual tournament has raised more than $140,000 to help defray operating costs of the shelter.

"We look forward to this event every year," said Lilla, the tournament organizer. "We are proud to be the corporate sponsor of this event, which benefits so many people. Our goal this year is to raise more than $12,000 for MainSpring House."

Founded in 1982, MainSpring House is operated by the Brockton Coalition for the Homeless (BCH) and provides shelter, food, clothing and services such as adult education courses, case management and referrals to individuals and families in need. The Conway House, BCH's facility for homeless families in Middleboro, was named in honor of Jack and Patti Conway to recognize their support of the organization.

Registration for the MainSpring House Charity Open begins at 7:30 a.m., and play opens at 8 a.m. with a shotgun start. To participate, sponsor a green, tee, or cart, or to make a charitable donation, call Denis Lilla, (781) 871-0080, ext. 327.

Founded in 1957, Norwell-based Jack Conway and Company is the largest independently owned real estate company in Massachusetts, with more than 600 agents in 36 offices from Boston to Cape Cod.

Maintaining the landscape in early May

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Now that Mother Nature has granted us several weeks of April showers, our May flowers should be bountiful, assuming our plants did not drown during the chilly downpours of the past few weeks. Extended periods of dampness in early spring enable the gardener to identify low spots or areas of poor drainage which should be corrected, if at all possible, during the warmer months.

As the sun rose on this first day of May, brilliant sunshine streamed through the treetops, quickly melting the dense, crystalline coating of frost which blanketed my lawn. The dismal weeks of dreary, wintry weather have departed and grateful gardeners are once again enjoying the tilling of the soil, voraciously scouring the nurseries for new plants and preparing their gardens for the glorious blooms of May. Wise, seasoned gardeners recognize the need for self-restraint when purchasing cold-sensitive annuals and vegetables, as so little is gained by planting these tender plants in cold, damp soil and all could be easily lost on a frosty evening until month's end.

Green thumbs up

Now that Mother Nature has granted us several weeks of April showers, our May flowers should be bountiful, assuming our plants did not drown during the chilly downpours of the past few weeks. Extended periods of dampness in early spring enable the gardener to identify low spots or areas of poor drainage which should be corrected, if at all possible, during the warmer months. Few plants enjoy sitting in soggy soils, particularly during the winter. Once plants have leafed-out and are actively growing, copious quantities of moisture can sometimes be tolerated, but while plants are dormant, standing water often leads to rot as saturated soils deprive the roots of air and the plant suffocates. Alternate freezing and thawing of wet soils may cause autumn transplants to heave out of the soil, exposing the roots to wintry blasts, or may sever the crown of the plant from its roots. Poor winter drainage is perhaps the most common cause of perennial plant failures during the winter months.

A well-prepared soil is the key factor in creating a successful garden. The addition of organic materials, including peat moss, leaf mold, well-decomposed cow manure, or compost, will greatly improve the condition of any soil. In heavy, clay soils, organic matter will help to improve drainage. In dry, sandy soils, while seemingly a contradiction, these additives help to retain moisture and nutrients. In particularly low areas, the construction of mounded or raised beds may be the only option to prevent flooding, especially during the winter months.

The warmth of the springtime sun in conjunction with our abundant moisture should begin to accelerate the temporarily retarded growth of our plants. A stroll through the perennial borders in early May, notepad and pencil in hand, provides an opportunity to note changes to be made, spaces to fill, and perennials in need of division. Patience is a necessity for some plants which tend to be late to break dormancy. Balloon flowers (Platycodon spp.), butterfly weed (Asclepias spp.), and many hosta cultivars, among others, are slow to make their appearance. Creating a simple garden map and updating it each season will help to locate these plants. Unfortunately, many plant markers have a way of wandering away during the winter, only to be found several feet away from their original location or they may disappear entirely. The shoots of the hardy hibiscus may not break through the surface until the end of May or even the beginning of June, but their thick, gray stumps which bore last year's huge, saucer-shaped flowers should mark their location.

As the handsome, bronze foliage of herbaceous peonies emerges, it is wise to provide support for the massive blooms which will appear in late May or early June. Nearly every year, just as these fragrant, elegant blooms reach peak, torrential downpours send the glorious blossoms sprawling. Plant support hoops, both single and double, are available at local nurseries and when inserted early in the season, the maturing foliage tends to completely cover and disguise the underlying support. I prefer the double-ringed supports for these stately, long-lived perennials and often leave them in place from year to year as I rarely find time to install them at the appropriate time. These supports will benefit many perennials which have a tendency to flop, but early placement is the key so the foliage can grow up and around the rings and eventually hide the underlying props.

It is not too early to begin monitoring the landscape for insect pests. Grubs in the lawn, cutworms in the perennial border and vegetable garden, and caterpillars on trees and shrubs can already be found munching on our favored plants. If you grow true lilies, those which grow from scaly bulbs with leaves radiating from the stems like an Easter lily, be on the lookout for the lily leaf beetle. This bright red, elongated beetle appears in late March and early April and quickly begins to feed on emerging lily foliage creating obvious holes in the leaves. Reddish-brown egg masses are laid on the underside of the foliage in April and May. When the larvae hatch they resemble tiny slugs and, if left untreated, the plants will be totally decimated. Hand pick the adults, eggs or larvae or apply 'Neem' products weekly, early in the season when young larvae are detected. An early application of a grub control product containing 'Merit' around the base of the lily stems may provide additional protection. Daylilies will not be attacked by this beetle but there are reports of it feeding on members of the Fritillaria family, hosta.

Common sense, Golden Rule are keys to ensuring fair treatment of all customers

By Carol Bulman, President
CONWAY FINANCIAL SERVICES

The Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination recently announced a plan to pay closer attention to the real estate industry's treatment of customers under the Equal Housing Opportunity Act of 1968, which dictates that all customers be treated fairly during their search for a home.

Later this year, the MCAD plans to send anonymous "testers" into the real estate marketplace in order to detect any practices of discrimination.

This has historically been an important issue for the Jack Conway Company, which prides itself on educating sales agents in all aspects of the law, especially equal-housing regulations.

At the Conway annual "Spring Rally," held recently at the Company Theatre in Norwell, our sales agents reviewed the important issues surrounding equal and fair treatment of customers looking to buy, sell or rent a home.

Our chief counsel, Jay Chaisson, reminded the audience that in servicing the public, we must be mindful to protect the rights of all citizens. As a result, I began thinking about the laws that protect the consumer in a mortgage transaction.

The mortgage industry is governed by the Equal Credit Opportunity Act (ECOA), or Regulation B, in regard to the equal and fair treatment of customers.

The goal of the ECOA is to eliminate discrimination in the evaluation of an applicant's creditworthiness and to make credit equally available to all creditworthy applicants. Regulation B prohibits discrimination on any of the following bases: race, color, religion, national origin, sex, marital status, age (as long as the applicant is old enough to enter into a binding contract or is not declared mentally incompetent), receipt of public assistance benefits, and the applicant's good faith exercise of rights under the Consumer Credit Protection Act. These nine considerations apply to all aspects of a credit transaction.

Common sense, Golden Rule are keys to ensuring fair treatment of all customers

Discrimination may be defined as the treatment of one applicant or group of applicants more or less favorably than another applicant or group of applicants for any of the reasons listed above.

For example, ECOA specifically requires that, within 30 days of completing an application, all customers be notified of the answer to their request for funds. The notice of "Adverse Action and Notification of Rights" details whether the loan was approved or whether other action is suggested. If the loan is denied on the terms originally requested, this is considered an "adverse action."

At this point there are two options for a creditor — issue a counteroffer with the terms under which the loan will be made, or send a notice that indicates the reason for denial. This notice must be in writing and include instructions for the applicant to contact the appropriate government agency if he or she feels that discriminatory practices have occurred.

Borrowers also must receive a written statement of provisions of the ECOA so they have an understanding of how they are protected under its terms.

The law further identifies specific areas and issues that cannot be discussed with a consumer, as the information requested could be construed as discriminatory. For example:

1. A creditor may not inquire about any income derived from alimony, child support, or separate maintenance payments, unless the applicant has indicated a desire to use the income as part of their total income considered in underwriting the loan.

2. Only the terms "married, unmarried or separated" may be used when making inquires concerning marital status. Unmarried includes single, divorced or widowed. In Massachusetts, a creditor cannot, however, ask whether a person is divorced or single.

3. A creditor may not gather information about an applicant's spouse unless the spouse will be contractually liable for the loan or the income of the spouse is being relied upon for underwriting the loan.

The Equal Credit Opportunity Act is broad in scope and is extremely important in the measurement of the treatment of a prospective borrower. To me, the substance of the law is simple and based on common sense, and if a creditor is ever unsure as to how to respond in a potentially discriminatory situation, the Golden Rule is a good guideline to follow.

Brudnoy AT THE MOVIES

Gladiator (C+)

"We who are about to die [of boredom] salute you!"

Did gladiators really say that? They did, all but the "of boredom" part, which refers to moviegoers, who may tire of "Gladiator" long before it's over. Combining snippets of fact about the emperor Marcus Aurelius (Richard Harris), who, as emperors of Rome go, was a worthy enough chap, and his successor, Commodus (Joaquin Phoenix), a bit of a rotter, with fictional stuff about our hero, "Gladiator" expends a considerable amount of coinage in recreating a lost world and, in the spirit of "Ben Hur," "Spartacus" and other lesser sword and mace spectaculars, inviting us to come and play.

We begin with a battle of the empire against Germania (that's Germany, students). With Marcus Aurelius, bedecked in purple, the royal color, watching, as his fine general Maximus (Russell Crowe), leads his troops into a long, gray afternoon of carnage. Maximus is a stand-up guy, whereas the emperor's son, Commodus, is a luxury-loving twit with vile tendencies to barbarism. As a near-death wish, the emperor asks a little favor of Maximus, to wit: save Rome from my son, and restore it to its previous status as a republic. If the crown don't fit, you gotta admit, it's time to do away with the monarchy. Alas for Rome, Commodus doesn't take his demotion sitting down, therefore strangles dear old dad, and when Maximus won't swear fealty to his new capo di tutti capi, sends him off to be killed. But Maximus escapes and hightails it back to his home in sunny Spain, where he finds that his wife and little son have been burned and crucified. Nasty.

In subsequent hours (it seems like hours), Maximus is enslaved, sold to Proximo (Oliver Reed), a showman, and trained to be a gladiator, quelling everybody, and eventually heading off to Rome, there to find the emperor's sister (and his former girlfriend) Lucilla (Connie Nielson), and a good senator (Derek Jacobi), among the smarties who have doubts about Commodus' ability to rule. Can you guess who gets to do a lot of fighting in the big-time arena in downtown Rome and at last to face Commodus? Is that your final answer?

The plusses of "Gladiator" are Crowe's straight-on performance, the chance to see Jacobi out of the purple (as in "I, Claudius") and into the senatorial white and blue, and some pretty nifty imagery, much of it computer-generated to save money on building things like, oh, a complete three-story coliseum. The downside is the excessive length, the repetitive, gory gladitorial combat, the cartoony nature of some of the characterizations (e.g., Reed's), the diversity-pandering use of the talentless Djimon Hounsou as a fellow gladiator (he says, at the end, "Make us free," reminding us of his "Give us free!" in "Amistad"), and the epicene portrayal of Commodus by Phoenix. Why do these flicks often portray evil as sniveling?

Where the Heart Is (C+)

Talk about product placement! Our heroine, Novalee Nation (Natalie Portman), whom we meet first in Tennessee, comes to us barefoot (literally) and pregnant, the latter courtesy of her hunky no-goodnik of a boyfriend, Willy Jack Pickens (Dylan Bruno), who leaves the upcoming mother of his child at a Wal-Mart in Oklahoma, allegedly to go get gas. Willy Jack never returns, and Novalee, having nothing better to do and no ideas, hunkers down overnight in the Wal-Mart, venturing out in the daytime to see the sights and meet the locals, then heads back to Wal-Mart at night and makes a cozy little spot for herself.

While out on her daily rambles, she meets a do-gooding woman with the memorable name Sister Husband (Stockard Channing), who mistakes her for somebody else, and, at the library, where the nearly illiterate Novalee has gone to learn about trees, she meets the odd fellow who seems to be running the place, one Forney Hull (James Frain). For no reason explainable by mere mortals such as your servant, during a storm, as Novalee is having her baby in the Wal-Mart, Forney crashes through the plate glass windows of the store and assists in the delivery. Novalee becomes something of a celebrity as mother of "the Wal-Mart baby," and the chain's honchos give her money and the offer of a job in any Wal-Mart across the fruited plains. She takes her new baby, whom she names Americus Nation, and moves in with Sister Husband and Sister's live-in elderly boyfriend, for her daily fornications with whom she beseeches God in her prayers for forgiveness. Can this get any sillier?

She meets a resilient lady, Lexie Coop (Ashley Judd), who has named her brood of a handful of babies after sweets — Baby Ruth, Praline, Brownie and such — and they bond. And religious fanatics steal Americus. And Novalee meets a nice store photographer by the name of Moses Whitecotten (Keith David), and she is adored by one and all, especially by Forney and she has sex once with another hunky guy in tight jeans and an Ipana smile, and she survives a tornado though not everybody does, and she inherits money, and she builds a new house, and she makes the wrong decision about Forney and then makes the right decision, and the thing ends, mercifully, but not before Willy Jack, cleaned up, has become a minor singing star and then, grungy again, a drunk and — ouch — an amputee.

Natalie Portman makes her way through a wacky life in "Where the Heart Is."

Natalie Portman is exquisite; no matter what her vicissitudes as Novalee, she always looks smashing. Stockard Channing knows how to act and helps out considerably, as does Sally Field in a cameo as Novalee's mom. The book on which this weeper is based was an Oprah fave. So, endure the names — Novalee Nation, Americus, Sister Husband, Forney (in a film much about fornication), Willy Jack, Moses Whitecotten, Lexie Coop — and try not to laugh. Suffer, if you can, the melodramatic overkill, and feast your eyes on Portman who, not yet 20, is already a star. Kleenex (speaking of product placement) will come in handy.

A romantic honeymoon in San Francisco

George Hobica

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

Q: I am getting married in July, and we are planning to go to San Francisco for our honeymoon. Can you recommend a place to stay that is not very expensive but that's romantic?

A: It depends on what you mean by "inexpensive," but here are some possibilities:

The Harbor Court Hotel. Most rooms offer sweeping views of the bay, Treasure Island and the Bay Bridge. Rates are cheaper on weekends and start around $200 a night. More information: 800/346-0555 or www.harborcourthotel.com.

The Serrano. Located in the theater district, this hotel also charges around $200 a night. Reservations: 877/294-9709 or www.serranohotel.com

For something even cheaper, try the Juliana Hotel, located at the foot of Nob Hill. You'll find great service and a wonderful restaurant called Oritalia. Rates begin around $150. Reservations: 800/328-3880 or www.julianahotel.com.

Q: I'm having trouble finding foreign currency at my local banks. Is there another way to get French francs, English pounds and other currencies delivered to my home?

A: One source is Chase Bank's Currency to Go service. You can buy up to $1,000 in almost any foreign currency and it will be delivered to your home the next day. Delivery is free for orders over $500, or $10 per transaction for those under $500. The exchange rates are a bit higher than what you'd pay at a bank, but the convenience may be worth it.

You can also buy American Express travelers cheques, and you can pay for your purchases with a major credit card (use a card that gives frequent-flier miles for an added bonus). For more information call (888) CHASE-84 or go online at www.currency-to-go.com.

Q: We'd like to rent a car in Europe this spring, picking it up in France and dropping it off in Holland, but we're finding that many companies charge a hefty drop-off fee. Any suggestions?

A: From now through June 15, 2000, Hertz is offering their European Freedom Rates for as low as $29 a day for an economy car with manual transmission at participating locations in Belgium, France, Germany, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Spain, Switzerland and the United Kingdom. The Freedom Rate program lets you pick up and drop off a car wherever you want with no extra charge. Saturday night keep is required. Reservations must be made at least eight hours in advance, prior to departure from the United States. For more information, visit the "Special Offers" section at www.hertz.com or http://hertz.com/spec/freedomrates98/europe99.cfm. For reservations, call (800) 654-3001 and mention code FNAEMC.

Q: We read your comments about flying in business class with a two-for-one offer if you buy your tickets with an American Express Platinum Card. We'll be traveling to Israel this year, but we don't have a Platinum Card. Is there any other way we can get a deal like this through other means?

A: El Al, the airline of Israel, offers something similar from all six of its U.S. gateways. Buy a full-fare business-class ticket, and your companion can fly with you for just $250 extra round-trip. The offer also applies to first-class travel and is valid for departures through Dec 31, 2000.

Red Lion liquor hearing to get another round

Selectmen ask for specifics

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Neighbors to the Red Lion Inn told selectmen Tuesday that they are concerned about an expansion of the liquor license at the new establishment.

They do not object to the serving of alcohol at the recently reopened restaurant and bar. But inn owner Gerde Ordelheide is adding two function halls, a wine bar, service bar by the proposed pool and basement jazz club — and requested that the liquor license be extended to cover all those facilities.

"We're proposing some restrictions be put on the liquor license because of the proximity to our homes," said Tom Astley, 88 S. Main St., who was spokesman for the South Main Street Association.

Specifically, the neighbors are asking that no liquor be allowed on the lower level of the former Lilac House where Ordelheide has planned to open an upscale wine bar along with a bistro and bread shop. They also asked that the liquor license for the function halls be permitted separately for each function, as is the procedure for the community center, and that the hours for functions be restricted.

The hours on the current license are from 8 a.m. to 1 a.m.

"We have no objection to the current restaurant, bar and jazz club," Astley said. "Our main concern is the Lilac House and function halls."

Selectmen listened to a range of testimony and continued the hearing to 7:45 p.m. Tuesday. They asked Ordelheide to return with specifics about capacity at each of the facilities within the inn and what activities would go on there. They will also take more public comment at

Zoning relief denied for senior housing project

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Zoning board members say they have nothing against senior housing, but say the proposal submitted by Noel Collins to develop five or six units at the old Edison plant off North Main Street has too much density for the site.

They voted Monday to deny variances and a special permit that would have allowed the proposed housing complex to move forward.

Collins first applied to the zoning board on Jan. 19. At last week's hearing, he told the zoning board that because the 100-day window required by law for the board to act had passed, he would automatically get the variance by "constructive grant."

"The request for a variance was so non specific. It was a request to do what?"
— Ben Lacy, zoning board

But the zoning board said this week that Collins' initial application was too vague, citing huge sections of the zoning bylaw, and lacked specifics about what he was applying for. The board said Collins did not properly request five or six units when he filed with the town clerk Jan. 19.

"The request for a variance was so non specific," member Ben Lacy said. "It was a request to do what?"

It wasn't until Feb. 22 that Collins applied for a variance under a specific sub-section of the by-law for the purpose of constructing five dwellings, the board said.

Collins needs a variance because the 21,000-square-foot parcel — which is the former Brockton Edison plant site at 365 N. Main St.

Artist shares memory of old Red Lion Inn

Prints created with new technology

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

A long-time Cohasset resident and artist is grateful that the Red Lion Inn finally got the attention it deserved.

But at the same time, she is nostalgic about the old inn and what it has meant to her family and friends over the years.

"When I knew it, the red paint had faded," says watercolorist Joanne Donnelly, who moved to town nearly 30 years ago. "It was a place to have a special dinner with family or meet friends for lunch.

"I tried to capture the feeling because I loved it. It didn't matter that it needed a lot of repairs."
— Joanne Donnelly

"It was a happy, warm, loving place that actually had a life of its own."

Donnelly, who signs her work "J. Donnelly," painted two views of the "old" inn in the early 1990s. And now, thanks to a process called giclee — meaning ink spray — prints of her watercolors that look almost exactly like the originals are available. She is selling the unframed prints for $200 each at Flowers by Joann, at 39 S. Main Street in the village.

The restaurant and bar at the Red Lion Inn that dates back to 1704 reopened less than a month ago. The inn part with its 15 luxury suites and adjacent Lilac House that will house a bistro and function hall are still under construction.

Donnelly, a grandmother who raised six children in town, has watched the process with a sense of wonder.

"I'm so tickled he's done that," she says about the inn's owner Gerde Ordelheide. "If he hadn't we might have lost it completely and there wouldn't be anything there at all.

Little League kicks off another season

Girls softball players lead annual Opening Day parade

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

While it's fun to watch Pedro Martinez strike out 17 batters in a game or see Carl Everett smack a home run over the Green Monster, it can be even more entertaining to watch games where the players are not distracted by the media and shoe endorsements.

If you want to watch a baseball game where the players play simply for the love of the sport, you are in luck. The Cohasset Little League has just kicked off the 2000 season.

"If these kids win, they are not going to win a million dollars," said State Rep. Mary-Jeannette Murray. "The real purpose of Little League is to promote good sportsmanship and to be a team player."

Last Saturday, the town turned out for the annual Little League Parade, a perennial symbol that baseball in Cohasset is about to return for another season.

This season marks the first time the CYBA has been affiliated with girls softball as well as baseball.

It was the first time softball players marched in the parade, which they led from the Red Lion Inn to Barnes field for the Opening Day ceremonies.

The inaugural softball season will even feature an All-Star game on June 3.

Though the softball league may be new to Cohasset, the Little League parade is all about maintaining the traditions of small-town youngsters playing the game they love.

Continuing another Opening Day tradition, Murray threw out the inaugural first pitch.

"I have been doing that for at least 25 to 30 years now. I think I need to practice more," said Murray, who grew up in a family surrounded by athletes. Her father was a professional basketball player for the Boston Whirlwinds, back in the days when the Celtics played in New York City.

Permits now being issued will expire on May 31, 2001.

Hagerty proposal causes a ruckus

A proposal floated to allow the Cohasset Lobster Pound, which has to vacate the Mill River Marine Railway site on Border Street, to relocate to the Hagerty Property created sparks at Tuesday's selectmen's meeting.

Selectmen chairman Tom Callahan said there was a value to keeping the lobster pound in town. The business reports $3 million in annual sales.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the Hagerty Committee should take the issue up first and then the matter would come before selectmen.

But selectmen Michael H. Sullivan and Merle Brown said there was nothing to discuss.

"There should be no commercial business on that property at all," Brown said.

Sullivan said it was ludicrous that a retail establishment would even be considered for the end of Parker Avenue.

"It's not like it's a supermarket," Callahan said.

The Hagerty committee is charged with coming up with a recreational plan for the town-owned parcel.

Lobster Lab

The Lobster Lab has authorized spending up to $15,000 for immediate painting and other repairs to both the Hagerty building and boathouse at the site in order to make them useable by students participating in Summer Institute programs, lab president Kevin Ulmer stated in a letter to selectmen.

Selectmen are concerned about the condition of the buildings on the Hagerty property, which are leased to the Lobster Lab and Cohasset Maritime Institute.

The two non-profit organizations, recognizing there is significant overlap in their interests, are exploring a possible merger.

"Joint committees have been formed to study facilities needs, program development and legal/structural ramifications of the proposed merger," Ulmer said. Selectmen said

ConCom associate

Selectmen announced that Ann Brophy, 16 Beechwood St., is a new associate member of the conservation commission. The commission still needs another associate member. Interested citizens should call the selectmen's office at 383-4105.

New responsibilities

Town Manager Mark Haddad said building inspector Bob Egan would take over the duties of sealer of weights and measures.

Selectmen accepted the resignation of sealer Paul Migliaccio this week.

Egan will be paid $2000 for the additional duties, Haddad said.

Outfall pipe

Town Manager Mark Haddad said lobstermen met with the sewer commission last week over concerns about the sewer out-fall pipe in the harbor. Lobstermen, who store their catch in the harbor, said the additional fresh water from the pipe could endanger the lobsters. Haddad said the sewer commission agreed to do additional salinity tests.

"There's an open discussion between the sewer commission and lobstermen," Haddad said.

Forest Ave. sidewalk

Selectmen will conduct a public hearing prior to installing a sidewalk on Forest Avenue from North Main Street to Heather Drive.

Although the road is 20-feet wide, the town owns an additional ten feet on either side, Haddad explained. Because the sidewalk may disturb some stonewalls and landscaping, abutters will be notified about the hearing.

Haddad said estimates for the work range from $29-50 per linear foot. Based on available funds, this would allow for 1,800-3,600 feet on the westerly side.

"It is our recommendation that we lay out the location of the sidewalk, inform the residents and hold a public hearing before we begin construction," he said.

Visitor spaces

Two visitor-parking spaces for out-of-towners that do not require beach stickers have been delineated on Government Island near the sailing club, selectmen announced this week.

15-minute parking

Selectmen approved a 15-minute parking restriction from 6-11 p.m. for three parking spaces directly in front of Tedeschi's in the village. Parking in the village is currently limited to an hour. Town Manager Mark Haddad said the store, which is open late, is the only one affected by patrons of the newly opened Red Lion Inn. He said the manager complained that customers couldn't get into her store after hours because the spots were taken by restaurant-goers. Selectmen agreed to the restriction but asked that the parking signs in front of Tedeschi's be as unobtrusive as possible.

Recycling award

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund of Weymouth announced that Cohasset has been awarded a Municipal Recycling Grant from the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs and the Department of Environmental Protection in the amount of $1,225 to purchase a universal waste shed.

According to Hedlund, the grant program, started in 1990, has totaled 17 million in recycling equipment, household hazardous waste equipment, educational materials and technical assistance to municipalities throughout the state.

Hedlund indicated that Cohasset was selected for a grant because it has demonstrated a commitment to enhancing its recycling program.

"These core grants play a significant role in building Massachusetts' recycling infrastructure, helping to make recycling more cost effective for municipalities and reducing the environmental and health impacts of waste management," Hedlund said.

I am pleased to have worked with the town of Cohasset in a combined effort to help provide grants that will improve and enhance the quality of life for Cohasset residents."

Swans reunited after separation

Injured male fully mended

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The swan ruffled his feathers in a territorial display as it swam on the peaceful waters of Foundry Pond in Hingham for the first time in two weeks on Tuesday.

Then it swam over for a reunion with its mate and the two swans intertwined their necks in a display of affection as five baby swans – called cygnets — paddled along beside them.

"This is a happy ending," said Matt Laing, clinic director at the New England Wildlife Center, as he watched the family reunion through binoculars.

The male swan was admitted to the wildlife center April 24 after allegedly being shot with a dart by two 13-year-old boys armed with a blowgun.

In an unusual turn of events, the dart that penetrated the bird's side under its wing didn't break a blood vessel or hurt any of the swan's internal organs, but Laing discovered the swan had an infection in its foot from an unrelated injury that if left untreated, could have been life threatening.

"The foot is fully healed and if that wasn't taken care of, it could have gotten worse," Laing explained.

The law enforcement division of the Animal Rescue League of Boston has jurisdiction over the blowgun incident. Reached by telephone Tuesday, Lt. Alan Borgal of the rescue league would only say the league has filed an application for a complaint at Hingham District Court.

The rescue league took over the investigation, after the Hingham Police Department turned over its report, because the incident involves animal cruelty.

Hingham police Lt. John Norkaitis said the youths are slated to appear in Hingham District Court within two weeks.

Matt Laing, clinic director at the New England Wildlife Center, gets ready to release the male swan to Foundry Pond.

Wildlife technician Meredith Cooper holds the male swan just before it was released on Foundry Pond Tuesday.

The boys allegedly purchased the blowgun from an Army/Navy store in Oak Bluffs on Martha's Vineyard. Oak Bluffs police Det. Warren Gosson said police have talked to the shop owner who does not live on the vineyard. He said the Animal Rescue League was leading the investigation and the Oak Bluffs police would help in any way they could.

Blowguns are illegal in Massachusetts. The three-foot-long blowgun allegedly used is called "The Terminator." The boys could face charges of possession of a dangerous weapon and animal cruelty.

Laing and wildlife technician Meredith Cooper took the swan back to Foundry Pond on Tuesday after attaching a fish and federal wildlife band to its leg earlier in the day.

"This way if he ever turns up again, we'll get a call and be able to follow up on the animal," Laing said. The bands include a number – like a Social Security number — that will be on file with the national banding service in Maryland.

Laing said the swan is at least three years old and probably older because neighbors to the pond recall the pair nesting there every spring for six or seven years.

One of the neighbors – Maria Margeus of Kilby Street – stopped her car and ran down to watch the reunion.

"The babies were just born four days ago," she said.

Laing said being able to release a wild animal back into the wild again is a wonderful feeling.

"It's good to be able to help them recover enough to be released and be self-sufficient," he said.

And there was nothing quite like seeing the swans swim as a family just minutes after the male was released.

"It's great to see the family back together again," Laing said. "And he wasn't even a dad when he left."

After being released, the male swan, at left, swam over to its mate and cygnets for a family reunion.

ANOTHER HOT SHOT!

Last week we inadvertently left off one of the Deer Hill pupils who made it to the regional semi-finals in the Tobacco Free Hot Shots event in Braintree. Not only did fifth-grader Michelle Madge make it to the semi-finals but she finished first in her division!

With her win, Michelle qualified to participate in the Tobacco Free Hot Shots Final competition in Boston on June 17.

The event is sponsored by the South Shore Boards of Health Collaborative that includes Cohasset. The collaborative is trying to make smoking history!

Way to go, Michelle!

Making the honor roll (meaning maintaining a GPA of 3.2 or better (3.16 for freshmen) and having no grade lower than a C- are: juniors, John R. Crowley-Buck and Evan M. McCaffrey; and sophomore, Gregory F. Smith.

Keep up the good work, guys!

ON THE MEND

Jay Jay Healy of Cushing Road would like to thank all her friends and family for all the cards and flowers she received during her recent hospital treatment for a broken hip.

TALENT ON STAGE

Kelsey Henderson, a junior and daughter of Warner and Barbara Henderson of Cohasset, performed recently in "Open Spaces," the annual student dance concert at The Cambridge School of Weston. Kelsey choreographed a stunning piece that opened the second act called "Breath Cycle." The dance featured five dancers and began with the dancers suspended in cocoon-type pods that hung from the ceiling. Moving from the pods to the floor, the dance seemed to explore cycles of life and breath and dealt with issues of interconnectedness. Kelsey danced in the piece as well as in a number of other selections. "Open Spaces inaugurated the school's new Mugar Center for the Performing Arts and featured 12 original, student-choreographed pieces including Kelsey's.

MARK YOUR CALENDAR

You could tell by temperatures earlier this week that summer is almost here. That means the Cohasset Swim Center will open soon. You won't want to miss the fun of opening day as the center splashes in the 2000 season with fund-raising events including water sports, a family cookout, bakewalk, membership raffles and a huge yard sale. Rain date is June 25.

Organizers are looking for donations for the yard sale. Items can be drooped off at the Swim Center (off Sohier Street) from 8 a.m. to noon, on June 10 & 17. Please tag items. No clothing, please. Wrapped baked goods are also needed on the day of the event. Call Trish Fortin, 383-2025 or Andrea Martone, 383-9791 for more information.

TURNING 88

Can you believe the Social Service League of Cohasset is 88 years old? The organization does so many wonderful things including hosting special programs like the one slated for May 17. The league in conjunction with the board of health is hosting a free program featuring Genevieve Lane, a practitioner of traditional Chinese medicine from 7:30 to 9 p.m. Wednesday at St. Anthony's Parish Center. She will speak on restoring body balance and wellness through acupuncture, herbal medicine, massage therapy, homeopathy and Reiki. Refreshments will be served. For more information, call the league at 383-0771.

AMERICAN LEGION

Cohasset is lucky to have Tom Wigmore who works as a police/fire dispatcher and in his free time serves with the Sons of the American Legion. Tom was appointed to the national executive committee of the Sons and just returned from the national conference in Indiana. Tom is one of eight representatives on the national committee from Massachusetts.

RADIANT TULIPS

Thanks so much to those who planted the island at the intersection of Spring and South Main streets with dozens of red tulips. The flowers were in full bloom as we drove by on Saturday and literally lit up the area which is undergoing sewer line installation and could definitely use the lift.

FOOD DRIVE

Cohasset Post Office workers will again be working for the Cohasset Food Pantry Saturday, May 13, when residents are asked to leave food and household supplies by their mailboxes to be picked up by mail carriers for eventual delivery to the pantry. The food pantry "wish list" includes cold cereal, fruit juices, pasta sauce, jellies and jams, canned fruit and vegetables, condiments such as mayonnaise, ketchup and mustard, coffee and white sugar. The pantry has enough pasta, rice and rice products and uncooked beans at the moment.

AROUND TOWN WRITER

The Cohasset Mariner is looking for a local resident to compile the weekly Around Town column. It might be fun for someone who's lived in town a while or for a newcomer who'd like to get to know the town better. Please call Mary Ford, 741-2933 with questions.

Please share your good news with Around Town! Items may be dropped off at Cohasset News on Brook Street in the village or sent by fax to 741-2931. E-mail submissions can be sent to cohasset@cnc.com.

Don't be a stranger, let us hear from you!

DONATION

Cohasset Rotary Club president Ken Roth presents a check to Police Chief Brian Noonan that will go towards the repainting and refurbishing of the four-wheel drive vehicle the police department recently obtained from a government surplus equipment program.. Noonan thanked the numerous organizations that have contributed to the fund-raising effort.

Fighting cancer with a team effort

Hingham man leads crew in Relay For Life

By Kathleen Zigmont
CORRESPONDENT

For Bob Clifford, the annual Cohasset Relay for Life fundraiser, which raises money for the American Cancer Society June 9-10, is more than just a way to raise money. It's a celebration.

"Before I got into this, I would just give some money to some causes like a lot of other people," said Clifford, 55, of Hingham.

But then in 1996, Clifford discovered he had prostate cancer, and the reasons behind those causes became very real. Now healthy, Clifford found that he wanted to do more than just write a check.

"I decided after having surgery that I wanted to get involved with the American Cancer Society because they were so helpful and gave so much support when I needed it. There is a real sense of helplessness when you are diagnosed with cancer, and even when the bad time passes, you don't forget that," he said.

Around the time Clifford was deciding how to get involved, the first Relay for Life committee was forming, and Clifford saw a way to help. At the Relay for Life, teams of eight or more make their way around the Cohasset High School track, around the clock, to raise funds for the fight against cancer. Team members collect sponsorships in advance and agree to keep one member on the track at all times. Last year's Relay, which had 32 teams, raised $77,000.

"I was given a second chance, and this was a way to both give back and celebrate my health," he said. Clifford got together a team to participate and they walked the Cohasset High School track, dedicating their work to a friend suffering from cancer.

Since then Clifford and his team has always shown up at the Relay for Life and has always dedicated the team's efforts to a family member or close friend with cancer.

Cancer survivor Bob Clifford with his daughter Elsbeth and wife Kathy in their Hingham home.

"Unfortunately, we never run out of dedications," he said. Last year's team raised $5,500 in the name of Clifford's teenage nephew, who is now doing well and plans to walk with Clifford's team this year.

This year, the fourth annual, Clifford hopes to raise even more in the name of Holly Chase, 23, of Weymouth, who is suffering from advanced Hodgkin's disease.

"She is truly in a battle for her life and has been through two chemotherapies, full-body radiation and recently a bone-marrow transplant," said Clifford, who walked with Chase in last year's Relay.

"But she's a fighter, and she can beat it," Clifford said of Chase, who is engaged to be married in the fall.

According to Craig Bleicken, event chairman, the committee hopes to raise $90,000 For the American Cancer Society.

"Each team will keep a representative on the track throughout the 21 hours, with members walking in shifts," Bleicken said. Relay teams represent families, clubs, churches, neighborhoods and companies and are encouraged to camp out in tents throughout the night and enjoy the festive atmosphere created by music, food and camaraderie. Starting the "night shift" will be a luminaria ceremony at 9 p.m. to both remember and honor loved ones that have had cancer. At 6 p.m. Friday evening, a "survivor's lap" will be held, where the names of cancer survivors are called out as they make one lap around the track. Clifford said he and his team is hoping one special survivor can make it.

"Holly said she plans to be there, so I know she will be," said Clifford. He said both the luminaria and survivor's lap ceremonies are both touching and emotional.

"It's more of a celebration of life. Cancer survivors have a bond as they help to find a cure, a camaraderie," he said.

Bleicken said the Relay serves a lot of purposes.

"The Relay will be a great way to renew our hope in the fight against cancer, while also doing something practical to support the American Cancer Society's research, education and patient service programs," he said.Corporate sponsors for the relay include the Red Parrot Restaurant and the Red Lion Inn.

Funds raised during the relay will support American Cancer Society cancer control programs, including a research initiative that has supported 30 Nobel Prize winners during its history. The society is continuing the world's largest population study, which established the definitive connection between smoking and lung cancer and continues to examine factors that affect cancer risk.

The American Cancer Society is also a source for comprehensive information about cancer through its 1-800-ACS-2345 number, which operates 24 hours a day, seven days a week, in both English and Spanish. Funds raised during the Relay For Life support this service, which also connects callers to services offered for patients and families.

"I decided after having surgery that I wanted to get involved with the American Cancer Society because they were so helpful and gave so much support when I needed it."

— Bob Clifford, cancer survivor

Local services provided by the American Cancer Society to cancer patients include transportation to outpatient treatment by Road to Recovery volunteer drivers, support for women with breast cancer through the Reach to Recovery visitor program, and information on maintaining personal appearance during treatment through the Look Good...Feel Better program.

Shifting sands of Greenbush

No matter which side of the tracks you're on the changing momentum of the Greenbush project can make you crazy.

We've written literally hundreds of train stories over the past decade. Some herald the train's sure arrival and others talk about the train being sidetracked.

So times really haven't changed. Although we do think the impetus is currently tilting toward the likelihood of Greenbush due to the flurry of activity at Hingham Town Hall this week.

Hingham selectmen have been negotiating with the MBTA and appear to be just inches away from a deal. Selectmen have called another special meeting at 7 p.m. Friday at which they should provide more details.

But with all the attention Hingham gets — fueled by its citizenry and some town officials who have been vocal in their opposition and wouldn't let up on what they want — it's easy to forget that the train will also traverse Cohasset and end in Scituate.

In Cohasset, the Greenbush mitigation committee, under the leadership of Tom Gruber, has been working tirelessly in an effort to get the best agreement possible to protect the town from impacts of the train.

And in Scituate — a town that will shoulder the impact of the train layover site — negotiations continue about where to site that facility.

However, there should be no doubt that the town which played the lead role in opposing Greenbush may also have bought some time and may have ultimately forced the MBTA to build a "more sensitive" railroad.

For example, Hingham has been the driving force behind the Section 106 process — a federal law — that ensures protection of historic resources along the right of way. Scituate and Cohasset will both benefit from Hingham's efforts as dozens of properties in both those towns also will be covered under Section 106.

Although all of us can agree that we'd like to put Greenbush to rest one way or another, the project still has a ways to go. And until that first piece of track is laid anything is possible.

Certainly many in Hingham have maintained their strong opposition and dug their feet in the sand, albeit at the frustration of MBTA officials and proponents. Some may have even questioned their methods, but never their intentions to get the best for Hingham. But if it does come — even project proponents who loved to hate Hingham — may have Hingham to thank for a better train.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Moors rocks

TO THE EDITOR:

One would think that the Historical Society would feel obliged to honor the wishes of the donor of the Moors Rocks parcel on Jerusalem Road: that the land remain undeveloped. Now that the 50-year-old restrictive covenant has expired, the Historical Society is quoted as saying it does not want to bind future members of the society to honoring that wish.

Seems to me that the society instead should be determined to bind future members of the Historical Society, or future owners of the parcel, to honor the intent of the donor: that the parcel remain undeveloped.

Preservationists should not put much stock in the belief that the property is technically unsuited for development, and therefore is not at risk. Technological developments in small on-site waste treatment make almost any site useable, albeit at considerable cost. But waterfront property now commands such a premium that the cost of an on-site treatment plant is almost irrelevant.

It is to be hoped that good citizens will provide enough financial support to the Cohasset Conservation Trust to enable it to purchase the property from the Historical Society at a reasonable price, so that it will remain forever undeveloped.

It seems especially important to preserve one of the last remaining views of the ocean from Jerusalem Road, now that the owners of the property across from the former Knapp estate have thumbed their noses at the public by planting a tasteless and needless hedge along the street-side stone wall. The hedge soon will obstruct the view from the street.

Route 3A traffic

Mr. Mark Haddad
Town Manager

I believe there is a great and dangerous problem on Route 3A in the area of JJ's.

Based on the accident we discussed last year, it seems as if the conditions are as such that situations of speed, turns from both sides of the road, drivers who routinely bypass turning traffic, and the general makeup of the area of roadway are conducive to more problems.

I would like to suggest installation or implementation of all or some of the following on an urgent basis. Given my lack of expertise in traffic management, I'm sure there are other potential remedies, as well.

A reduced speed zone from (Southbound) before the business area to King Street.

A portable speed warning, monitoring and display system.

Heavy signage warning that cars will be entering and exiting the roadway.

Caution and/or informational lighting.

Repainting of lines on the roadway.

"Jersey" barriers covering approximately 70 feet of the southernmost end of JJ's driveway, bordering route 3A, to decrease the chance that a collision between a northbound car passing another on the right which is turning into the parking area will not cause one to move into the picnic or standing area the typical high rate of speed on that stretch.

We have a huge issue of risk, observable by anybody monitoring traffic flow in and out of the businesses in the area. I am frightened by what I have seen, and believe Cohasset should coordinate with the state to improve the condition using conventional devices before some sort of post tragedy analysis creates similar cause.

More magazines

As you might expect, "Garden Design" is a magazine that showcases elegant gardens throughout the United States. But it also offers fascinating related articles. The January 2000 issue features an article about English potter Clarice Cliff, who "brought modern art to teatime." It also contains "The Man Who Planted Trees," an inspiring modern fable by Italian writer Jean Giono.

Cabinetmakers, carpenters and Norm Abrams fans will enjoy browsing through "Fine Woodworking." The June 2000 issue carries an article on the qualities of sweetgum wood. Another article compares "lipped doors" to "unlipped doors with an astragal" for those who wish to delve into such mysteries.

Audiobook survey

If you use the library's audiobooks, be sure to take part in the informal survey now going on at the library. By filling out a brief questionnaire, you can help define this collection's future direction.

Thumbs Up! for young adults

Public libraries on the South Shore are planning a new program for young adults this summer. Teens, ages 12-19, are invited to create a short video (no longer than 20 minutes long) and submit it for a prize. The Paul Pratt Memorial Library will hold a contest and announce a grand prize winner who will receive an "Oscar" at an awards ceremony Aug. 25 at the Duxbury Free Library.

COHASSET CARES

Confidence and pride in our town

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

I've been fortunate to know people in this town who would be considered conservative, others liberal, and others somewhere in between. Lately I've noticed something these individuals, of various ages, agree on: "Cohasset is a nice town, it really is!" With that realization coming to my attention, I focus on the matter of this column.

The town's recent vote of confidence in passing Pay-As-You-Throw deserves considerable follow-up, and we will do our best to do just that. Last week the Cohasset Recycling Committee members received an attractive and carefully-prepared draft of an informational leaflet from Merle Brown, representing the selectmen, to be sent in the future to all householders explaining what will be Cohasset's version of PAYT [there are many variants of the concept used in the nearly 100 Massachusetts towns employing PAYT]. The committee will discuss the draft at our meeting this coming Saturday. The PAYT operation will come under most conscientious scrutiny before it is released to the public. Our recycling committee leaders, Arthur Lehr and Merle Brown, are 100 percent dedicated to the town of Cohasset, you can be assured of that. The amount of volunteer time these men give to facilitate proper operation of the RTF is amazing. Our town is very lucky to have them.

I want to bring to your attention the struggle of another South Shore town in order to put our own into better perspective. This other town, bewailing the suddenly escalating costs of trash handling and not having instituted a successful recycling program, is having to levy additional and unexpected fees on its homeowners for the specific purpose of trash disposal [and this new charge in addition to an earlier recent increase for the same purpose]. Town officials are aware that if townspeople recycled conscientiously, the town would save money. [On my trips to the Cohasset RTF, I am greatly heartened to see Cohasset residents carefully handling their recyclables. Cohasset residents do care, and it shows.]

What you need to know about foxes

ANIMAL CONTROL

PAUL MURPHY 383-9119

In response to the numerous calls I have received over the past weeks, I have asked The Mariner to reproduce this information on foxes. Please call me at 383-9119 with any sightings so I can track the movement of these animals around the town. This is part one, watch for part two next week.

What is the most studied urban wildlife species in the world? If you guessed the red fox you are right. Thanks to the work that is being done in Europe and Great Britain, there are numerous research papers, ranging from population and behavioral studies to reviews of injury and disease, devoted exclusively to urban foxes. The research expands upon what anyone who has observed or read about foxes already knows: these are fascinating animals that combine many of the behavioral and ecological traits of cats with their obvious background as dogs — enough so that the red fox is often been called the "catlike canine."

To many people, the fox is the least expected of our urban animals, and it's common to hear people remark that they had no idea such animals lived in cities. In fact, they are well adapted to do so, being what most other successful urban mammals are: generalists who are able to use a wide range of habitats, exploit a wide range of natural and human-produced foods and alter their activity schedules, if necessary, to be primarily active at the times when humans are not. The reward for this is a longer life than their rural counterparts and a death that is more likely to come from disease or an accident than by predation, hunting or trapping.

Natural History

Classification and Range

There are five species of foxes found in North America but only two — the red (Vulpes vulpes) and gray (Urocyon cinereoargentus) — are town or city dwellers. Foxes are canids and close relatives of coyotes, wolves and domestic dogs. No fox, however, interbreeds with these other forms. Furthermore, there are considerable differences among fox species. For example, the red and gray foxes have characteristics so different and distinct from other species that they're placed in separate genera, which is the level of classification above species.

Gray foxes are known to be native to North America, but whether or not the red fox was ever native is still debated. It seems likely that they were, arriving by the same land bridge that the first humans did during the last Ice Age. Many certainly were brought here from Europe in the 1700s to carry on the hunting traditions started there.

Foxes are not large animals, although their relatively long legs and bodies elongated by bushy tails make them appear to be. The red fox is the bigger species, weighing 7 to 15 pounds and reaching about 3 feet in length with an extra foot- or foot-and-a-half-long tail. Gray foxes rarely exceed 11 or 12 pounds and often are much smaller. Because there is a great variety of color types among foxes, it is not always a sure bet that a red-colored fox is a "red fox" or a gray-colored fox a "gray." Where a close examination can be made, the white tip at the end of the tail is indicative of a red fox.

Both red and gray foxes prefer diverse habitats that have fields, woods, shrubby cover, farmland or other variety. Gray foxes are more linked to woodlands than red, and are actually capable of climbing trees when in the mood (or required to do so). Both species readily adapt to urban and suburban parklands, golf courses, mixed suburban developments and other built-up areas.

Foxes are primarily nocturnal in urban areas, but this seems to be more of an accommodation to avoiding humans than it is a preference. (It doesn't always mean a fox is disturbed or sick if it's out and about by day.) They will be active by day as long as they feel secure and in or near enough to escape cover. This is when they pursue prey that are also active by day, such as squirrels.

The Bold Fox

Sometimes red foxes will exhibit a brazenness that is so overt as to be disarming. A hiker along a woodland trail may encounter a fox that does not retreat, but sits and watches the human approach. Likewise, a homeowner hanging laundry may watch a fox walk through the yard, going about its business, seemingly oblivious to the human nearby. Why this occurs, is anyone's guess.

Diet

Foxes, like many urban adapted species, have a wide variety of plant and animal matter in their diet. Although far better adapted and more capable hunters than, say, raccoons, at some times of the year fruits will be more frequent elements of the diet. One of the reasons they are described as catlike is that foxes tend to hunt more by stealth than the pursuit typical of many other canids. A hunting red fox is all ears, literally, as it seeks the faint rustling sounds made by its prey, stalking it closely and launching a long, graceful, leaping pounce at the moment it feels it has the prey's location marked.

Reproduction

Kits, as the young are called, are born in the spring, usually in March or April. As many as eight or as few as three are born, with litters averaging four or five. The kits are weaned by nine weeks and begin to hunt with their parents. They may remain nearby the parents until late summer or early fall before dispersing to establish their own territories.

Dens

Dens are mostly used as an escape from severe winter weather, or when pups are being raised. Even when winter weather is uncomfortable to humans, foxes will use brush piles or fallen logs to rest under. Both species may dig their own dens, or they may occupy the abandoned dens of woodchuck, badger or other burrowing animal.

Public Health

Foxes are a vector species for rabies, which means that they are the primary carrier of one of the major strains of this disease that infects different animal species. In some parts of the country, foxes carry the echinococcosis tapeworm that can cause a serious and sometimes fatal disease in humans.

Peyton Place is revisited

The little town of Camden, Maine, held a nostalgic film festival last week to celebrate the occasion nearly 50 years ago when it entertained visitors from Hollywood who were making a movie called "Peyton Place," which had been turned away by the real Peyton Place — Gilmanton Iron Works, N.H.

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Camden called its festival "Small Towns, Steamy Movies," because "Peyton Place" (the movie) was rejected as too steamy by the small New Hampshire town just as it had rejected "Peyton Place" (the novel) which was said to reveal what went on behind closed doors after the sidewalks were taken in at Elm and Main.

The book and movie contained accounts of sex, abortion, incest, race and all the other little things that made it must reading by flashlight under the covers for every pimple-faced youth in the nation. If it wasn't banned in Boston, then they weren't really trying.

It was so wildly popular that it held the No. 1 spot on the New York times best seller list for more than a year. It sold nearly 10 million copies in its first 12 years on the bookstands. A year after it came out, it was made into a movie and a dozen years later (and cleaned up considerably) it became a popular TV series.

The author of "Peyton Place" (the novel) was Grace Metalious, the 32-year-old wife of a school teacher, who was so ostracized by her neighbors in Gilmanton Iron Works, that she dumped her husband, moved away and took to drinking which killed her before she was 40.

Now the book is probably on the summer reading list for the middle schools.

The point of all this is that if "Peyton Place," (the novel) were published today it may not make anybody's best seller list, the movie would probably get a PG-13 rating and Grace Metalius herself would be speaking her experiences to the spring meeting of the Gilmanton Garden Club.

I was old enough to vote (and then some) when "Peyton Place" (the novel) came out so I was able to take it out of its plain brown wrapper and read it on the subway like it was a harlequin novel. I could even snicker out loud at the good parts.

The "Peyton Place" of my day, the first book I was specifically forbidden to read, was a slim work of fiction called "God's Little Acre." Our copy — and I call it that because all the kids in the neighborhood owned it — was so dog-eared that it automatically opened to the "good parts."

Boy, the things that Will Thompson did to Darling Jill and Griselda had to be read to be believed.

Now the book is probably on the summer reading list for the middle schools.

A few years ago, the Book Review of the New York Times asked some well known authors to recall the first book they were told not to read. It sounded like a good idea to me so I put the question to selected members of my circle of friends.

"When did you read your first dirty book?" I asked one friend who is so straight she refers to "dammed" as the D-word.

"I never read a dirty book," she replied primly.

"What? You've never read "Lady Chatterley's Lover!" said I incredulously.

"Oh yes," she said. "I thought it was great."

Selectman sends message of waste reduction to governor

Cohasset selectman Merle Brown and the Massachusetts Coalition to Reduce Waste met at the State House Monday to announce that Cohasset joined with 47 cities and towns across the state to adopt resolutions to increase waste reduction and recycling.

The Waste Reduction Resolution adopted by the Cohasset Board of Selectmen was delivered to Gov. A. Paul Cellucci along with similar resolutions from 47 other towns and cities. These resolutions urge the Cellucci administration to prioritize waste reduction and recycling programs as it makes final decisions in the new 10-year Beyond 2000 Solid Waste Master Plan.

"Waste disposal has been a major burden on taxpayers and local governments for far too long," said Brown. "The surest way to reduce our costs and protect our health is to reduce waste. The decisions that the Cellucci administration make in this master plan will have an impact on how all communities across Massachusetts control solid waste management costs for the next 10 years."

Cohasset selectmen passed the Waste Reduction Resolution at a meeting on Jan. 25. The Resolution was drafted by the Massachusetts Coalition to Reduce Waste and presented to the board of selectmen by Stop Any Further Expansion (SAFE), a coalition member. The Resolution calls on the state to reduce waste generation by at least 20 percent and to increase recycling rates to 50 percent or more by the year 2010, to increase state funding for local recycling programs, and to initiate Extended Producer Responsibility (EPR) programs.

EPR, also called "producer takeback," requires manufacturers to assume the costs of collecting selected products at the end of their useful lives. EPR is already implemented in more than two dozen countries to give producers an incentive to design products that are non-toxic and easy to recycle.

"We live in a society where 80 percent of what we buy gets thrown away after one single use—this cost of convenience inevitably comes back on the taxpayer," said Kevin O'Donnell of SAFE. "Municipalities are not responsible for the design of these toxic and throw-away products, and to be forced to pay for their disposal is clearly a different kind of 'unfunded mandate.' EPR would put the cost of disposal and recycling where it really belongs—on the producer."

"The Massachusetts Coalition to Reduce Waste, which consists of more than 45 citizen groups, is the organizing force behind this Resolution campaign," said John McNabb, Clean Water Action staffer and spokesperson for the Coalition. "We hope that Gov. Cellucci will be responsive to the concerns of his constituents and the local officials of the 48 cities and towns that have signed on to the Waste Reduction Resolution. If the Cellucci administration includes these goals in the new master plan, it will save taxpayers and local governments a significant amount of money over the next 10 years."

"I think the building is beautiful and will be a real plus for the town."

Donnelly, who has painted ever since her parents gave her a set of pastels when she was a child, visits her daughter in San Clemente, Calif. for about a month every year. It was in California that she discovered giclee or iris print — relatively new technology through which a reproduction of a fine art print can be made. Donnelly explains the process begins with a digital scan of the artwork, then a computer controlled iris printer, using tiny ink jets, sprays the image onto canvas or paper that has been attached to a drum.

As the drum moves at high speed, the image is "painted" as the spray nozzle moves slowing across the spinning surface, she says. The process, which results in an exceptional reproduction of the original painting in terms of color and detail, can take up to an hour for a single print.

It was on a visit to a studio in San Juan Capistrano, Calif. that Donnelly examined some flower prints by a local artist and couldn't believe her eyes.

"I couldn't tell the difference between the originals and the prints," she recalls.

So she decided to have the watercolors she'd painted of the Red Lion Inn reproduced using the new technology. The image is created on the same paper she used, so the prints appear soft just like the original watercolor. Two hundred of each print are available. One is a front view of the old inn and the other is a side view looking down South Main Street from the old Lilac House. All the prints are signed and numbered.

Donnelly met Joann Shea, owner of Flowers by Joann, about seven years ago, when she went to the flower shop, which was then housed in the Lilac House at 85 S. Main St., looking for a job.

"I said that I was looking for work and didn't know how to make flower arrangements but that I had an art background," Donnelly recalls. "Joann asked to see my work and she began to show them.

"I never got that job," she laughs. Shea has been showing Donnelly's watercolors ever since.

Donnelly — whose work includes other town landmarks like the Lilac House, flowers and landscapes — painted both views of the old inn in June, the front view one year and the side view, the next.

"To me it's the way it looked with the sun shining on it," she says looking at the watercolors. "I tried to capture the feeling because I loved it. It didn't matter that it needed a lot of repairs."

Donnelly decided to have the prints made and offer them for sale before the memory of the old inn fades away completely.

"I think people in a few years will be so happy with the new Red Lion Inn that they won't care about the old one," she says. "So I thought, 'now is the time, if I'm going to do it at all.'"

J. Donnelly is a graduate of the Mass. College of Art and has had graduate studies at the University of Nebraska at Lincoln, the University of Arizona at Tucson, and School of the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston. She is a member of the Cambridge Art Association, is an associate member of the New England Watercolor Society, the North River Art Association, the Milton Art Association and the Milton Museum.

Ordelheide said at the hearing this week that he has already booked 35 functions in the next 12 months and said he is looking for more. The sheer number of functions — such as weddings, rehearsal dinners and class reunions — could make permitting them individually unwieldy.

Selectmen explained to the neighbors that facilities, such as the community center, apply for a one-day liquor license when it has a function that includes alcohol. Private functions at the Lightkeepers House hire their owner caterers that have their own liquor licenses.

Ordelheide said he is sensitive to the neighbors' concerns. He plans to put tables and seats on the porch to prevent customers from using the porch as an extension of the bar.

He estimated capacity at the wine bar at 30, the function hall at the Lilac House at 80 and at function hall at the barn to be constructed behind the inn at 200.

Those numbers concerned Meg Bertolami, 95 S. Main St.

"Granting the expansion of the liquor license in all areas is going to affect us in many ways," she said. Bertolami, who has two daughters, said noise was an issue as well as parking. She said her daughters like to walk to and from the village.

"I'd like them to walk through the village to the common without having to walk by people who are drinking," she said.

The neighbors also wondered how the village could handle the expanded inn that might have a function or two going on during an event like the South Shore Arts Festival that draws thousands to town.

Ordelheide said there is always a trade off. He pointed out that village was nearly dead and the inn is a big part of the revitalization.

"I am in a business district," he said. "Everyone before went under in the Red Lion Inn." He explained the only way the Red Lion can be viable is with the function halls.

"Without the function halls, the Red Lion would not create the revenue to get the pay back," he said.

Bertolami also asked if an engineer had done a sound study. Michael Hayes, an attorney representing the Red Lion, said plans that included decibels were presented to the planning board. Selectmen will ask the building inspector to report on the noise issue.

Zoning relief denied for senior housing project

— is zoned single-family residential.

At the February hearing on the project, the zoning board – while recognizing the need for senior housing – was concerned about setting a precedent for such high density in a residential area.

At a later hearing, Collins — who made the case that one of the buildings formerly housed sleeping facilities and therefore, was a "dwelling" under the bylaw — asked for six units. If the building was a dwelling, Collins could obtain zoning relief with a special permit. However, the zoning board disagreed and said the building had been abandoned.

The level of zoning under a special permit is less burdensome than with a variance.

In a telephone interview, Collins said he disagreed with board's decision and said he was moving forward with the project.

"We regret they didn't approve of the project on its own merits," he said.

Collins said he will file notice of the "constructive grant" with the town clerk and other interested parties such as abutters following which there will be a 20-day appeal period. He said in the absence of the appeal, the project is entitled to a building permit under the necessary conditions such as completed plans.

Nevertheless, Collins said he is anxious to read the zoning board decision.

"I'd like to see if there is any substantive criticism of the project," he said. "If they have any, I didn't hear it. I have not heard one syllable criticizing the project.

"I'm surprised they didn't want to approve it."

Chairman Woody Chittick said this week that the board is not against senior housing.

"We would love to see senior housing," Chittick said.

But the place to decide that issue is town meeting, he said.

Collins' and his partner in the project, Anthony Catlin, have a purchase and sale agreement for the site that is owned by Lawrence Notarangelo of Hull contingent on the project getting the necessary permits.

The zoning board voted to deny variances for density, change in use, abandonment, and a special permit for wetlands issues. Chittick said no evidence was presented that the water run off problems at the site could be solved.

Town seeks deal with T

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Hingham isn't the only town along the Greenbush line negotiating a deal with the MBTA.

Cohasset's mitigation committee has been hard at work trying to hammer out the best agreement it can to protect its citizens and their property from impacts of the train.

Tom Gruber, chairman of the mitigation committee, told selectmen Tuesday that the T is currently offering:

To extend the James Brook pipe from Strawberry Parfait to Elm Street at no expense from the town;

A bridge alternative at Rocky Lane as opposed to access from Rose Hill across Sanctuary Pond;

To pay for a new well to replace the Sohier Street well

To provide $100,000 for an historic preservation fund

To install a traffic light at the lower King/Forest/N. Main St. intersection to clear the intersection when a train is coming.

Selectmen chairman Tom Callahan balked at the $100,000 figure for a preservation trust fund when Hingham is getting $1.3 million.

Gruber explained that there was some evidence to suggest that property values of homes in close proximity to the tracks (within 500-700 feet) could lose up to 10 percent of their value.

The concept behind the preservation fund would be to create a grant program to help people take extra care of those homes so they don't fall into degradation. Gruber said the fund might be important or it could be something that Cohasset could trade for something that would benefit the town more.

The mitigation committee is meeting at 7:30 p.m. Monday at town hall after which the committee will have a more concrete plan for selectmen to consider, Gruber said. Selectmen will have final say over the mitigation plan.

May 16 open house on Greenbush slated

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The US Army Corps of Engineers and the MBTA will hold an informal public meeting to gather information on historic resources along the Greenbush Line and Greenbush project effects and mitigation for historic resources in Cohasset from 6-8 p.m., Tuesday, May 16 at Town Hall.

"This is part of the Section 106 process," said Tom Gruber, chairman of the Greenbush Mitigation Committee.

"Anyone with concerns about the train's impact on a historic structure or anything archeological – and what to do to ameliorate those impacts, should go and express their concern."

— Tom Gruber, mitigation committee

Section 106 of the National Historic Preservation Act is a law that protects archeological and historic sites when there is a major infrastructure project, Gruber explained.

The MBTA, the Massachusetts Historical Commission, the Army Corps and the National Advisory Council on Historic Preservation have all been at the table during the process.

On Tuesday, Sverdrup – consultants for the MBTA – will present a series of drawings of the train right-of-way in Cohasset with descriptions of Cohasset properties deemed to be historic.

The public meeting is an "outreach effort" by the MBTA, Gruber said.

"Anyone with concerns about the train's impact on a historic structure or anything archeological – and what to do to ameliorate those impacts, should go and express their concern," Gruber said.

Maps showing historic resources and proposed mitigation will be on display and informational material will be available. Corps and MBTA representatives will answer questions and listen to local views on significant historic resources and historical resource issues. Residents will be able to submit written comments for the record.

The town received the mitigation plan last week. The MBTA must develop mitigation for each historic structure, Gruber said.

If you have questions, contact Kevin Dasey, MBTA senior project coordinator, at 617-222-2086 or at kdasey@mbta.com.

Dems drive for food pantry

The Cohasset Democratic Town Committee will hold its annual food drive on Saturday, May 20, at Stop & Shop and Shaws on Route 3A, Cohasset, between 9:30 a.m. and 3 p.m.

Members of the town committee and young volunteers will be collecting non-perishable food items to benefit the Cohasset Food Pantry which is very low on cereals, canned fruits and vegetables, fruit juices, pasta sauce, coffee, and paper and cleaning products, according to food pantry Director Marjorie Steele. In June, the Democratic Town Committee will be presenting its annual scholarship to a graduating CHS senior with a demonstrated interest in community service.

Water board to meet with Arrowood developers tonight

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The water commission is planning to meet with the developers of a Scituate subdivision located on the border of Cohasset to discuss possible impacts on the town's water supply. The subdivision, Arrowood Estates, will be a 17-home subdivision on 65 acres of land next to Wompatuck State Park.

The water commissioners are concerned about storm water runoff from the subdivision and the proximity of several septic systems to the Lily Pond watershed. Construction on the project is already underway; an access road has been built and the septic systems have been installed. The developers of the subdivision, Mark and Walter Winchester and Steve Bjorkland, are scheduled to meet with the water commissioners at 8 p.m. tonight at a public meeting at the water plant on King Street to discuss the possible impacts of the project on Cohasset.

The water commission's environmental consultant, Norfolk Environmental of Raynham, has prepared a study of Arrowood, examining drainage designs and septic system plans. The entire subdivision sits within the boundaries of the Aaron River and Lily Pond watersheds.

According to the Norfolk Environmental study, the Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) requires the developers of Arrowood to employ Best Management Practices (BMPs) for storm water runoff draining out of Arrowood because of its location within the watershed. BMPs are a set of uniform standards that DEP requires for certain projects.

For Arrowood, BMPs include a storm water runoff system designed for large storms that occur only every two years, and larger storms that occur every 10 years. The drainage system must also control erosion and sedimentation. Although Arrowood's drainage design employs BMPs for the public access road, Arrowood Drive, it provide inferior designs for the Arrowood Drive extension, and access road to the north and east. Norfolk Environmental is recommending that all roads in Arrowood employ BMPs.

Some of the septic systems at Arrowood are only 200 feet from the Aaron River Reservoir, the minimum distance required by Title 5 in 1978.

Norfolk Environmental is critical of the design of septic systems in Arrowood. The septic systems in the subdivision comply with 1978 Title 5 regulations. However, Title 5 was rewritten in 1995 with more stringent standards. In January, 1998, the Scituate Board of Health approved the Arrowood septic systems under the 1978 Title V laws. According to the Scituate Board of Health, Arrowood had been approved for construction in 1994, before the revised Title 5 regulations were passed, and was allowed to be "grandfathered" under the older version of the law.

Some of the septic systems at Arrowood are only 200 feet from the Aaron River Reservoir, the minimum distance required by Title 5 in 1978. The newer Title 5 regulations require new septic systems to be at least 400-feet from reservoirs. Norfolk Environmental is recommending that Arrowood comply with the 1995 revised Title 5 regulations.

Cohasset officials have been concerned about the Arrowood project since the project got underway two years ago. At one point, a Scituate resident led a drive to convince the state and the towns of Scituate and Cohasset to purchase Arrowood for open space. But an appraiser placed that value of the land at $3.14 million, far more than Cohasset or Scituate could afford and more than the state was willing to commit. If the joint-purchase had been approved, the land would have been added to Wompatuck State Park.

Cohasset postal workers to collect for food pantry

Cohasset Post Office workers will again be working for the Cohasset Food Pantry Saturday, May 13, when residents are asked to leave food and household supplies by their mailboxes to be picked up by mail carriers for eventual delivery to the Pantry.

"This is a wonderful public service by the postal workers," Marjorie Steele, head of the Food Pantry operation, said. "It stocks our shelves for the summer and makes sure we're able to meet the needs of a number of Cohasset families for non-perishable food and household items. We hope townspeople will respond generously again to this effort as they have done in the past."

Last year the postal workers collected more than 4,200 pounds of foods and staples. This year's drive has been organized again by Richard Leach with the encouragement and support of Postmaster Stephen Cabezas.

"This is a wonderful public service by the postal workers."
— Marjorie Steele, head of the Food Pantry operation.

A "wish list" drawn up by Steele and her associate Bob Thompson, to guide residents in their donations, includes cold cereal, fruit juices, pasta sauce, jellies and jams, canned fruit and vegetables, condiments such as mayonnaise, ketchup and mustard, coffee and white sugar. Also needed are bathroom tissue and paper towels, toothpaste, and dishwashing and laundry detergent. Only taboos are outdated, dented, rusted or otherwise unappealing items.

Steele says the food pantry is currently well stocked with pasta, rice and rice products, tomato products and uncooked beans.

The carriers pick up the donations as they deliver the mail, then bring it to the Post Office where they are weighed. Other volunteers sort the items and help bring them to the Pantry in the basement of the Second Congregational Church on Highland Avenue beside the Town Hall, where they are shelved and stored.

The Pantry is open from 9-10 a.m. Tuesdays. Any Cohasset resident who meets limited income guidelines or who has special needs is eligible to receive food at two-week intervals.

Walter Murray

Walter Murray to run for state rep

Walter Murray, 36, of Hull will throw his hat into the ring for state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray's seat. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset, has decided not to seek reelection.

"The retirement of Mary Jeanette Murray marks the end of one political reign and the beginning of another," Murray stated in a press release. "If her tenure at the State House stands for anything, it stands for, among other things, the power of the incumbency. In today's politics, once a political leader has established a 'safe seat' he or she has more than a 90 percent chance of being re-elected.

"The more than 25 years that Mary Jeanette Murray has faithfully represented the 3d Plymouth District is a testament to that fact. It is because of the power of the incumbency and the importance of public service that I have decided to run once more for Mary Jeanette Murray's seat."

Murray, a former democrat who is now unenrolled, said the open seat is an opportunity to address the real issues that concern the district.

Two years ago, Murray challenged then fellow democrats Josh Cutler and Garrett Bradley for the democratic party nomination. Bradley won the primary and went on to run against Rep. Murray in the November election.

Murray says there is no room in the Democratic Party for a "pro-life and pro-family" candidates. He said if elected he will oppose the "same-sex" or "civil union" legislation that is currently pending in the legislature.

Murray plans to run on the issues of high water rates and auto insurance rates.

"I'd also like to tackle the issue of high prescription drug costs for the elderly by promoting a mandatory senior citizen discount from pharmaceutical companies that do business in Massachusetts," he said.. "I also want to work on getting more state dollars for the special needs students in our public schools so that we don't have to vote for one budget override after the next."

Murray, who lives in Hull, is a Hingham native. A former Suffolk County assistant district attorney who also provided legal assistance for victims of domestic violence through the Southeastern Mass. Legal Assistance Corp., Murray plans to work on his campaign full time.

Holden open house

On Tuesday, May 23, Cohasset residents are invited to an Open House to meet Mike Holden, Democratic Candidate for State Representative. This is a great opportunity to talk with Holden on issues that affect Cohasset and the Third Plymouth District. The event will be held at the Lightkeeper's House and kicks off at 6 p.m. For more information, call Barb Mullin at 383-0953 or Steve Norton at 925-3847.

Devine campaign

Last Saturday Maureen Devine, Republican candidate for state representative, held her first organizational meeting for her campaign team. Devine is seeking the house seat being vacated by retiring Rep. Mary Jeannette Murray (R-Cohasset).

"I plan to run a very positive and aggressive grassroots campaign," Devine stated. "The people of Cohasset, Hingham and Hull deserve a race on the issues. By running a grassroots campaign I will be able to personally discuss the hot topics with the voters."

Many key people attended and volunteered to take on key roles within the campaign organization. A volunteer meeting for the entire organization will be held in about two weeks.

Devine is an elected member of the Hingham School Committee and a local practicing attorney. She has also been a prosecutor in Plymouth County. Devine lives in Hingham with her husband Dennis and their two teenage sons.

Individuals wishing to join the Devine team should call (781) 740-1334 to volunteer.

Bradley online

Former Plymouth County Prosecutor and current Democratic candidate for state representative Garrett Bradley has brought his campaign online. With his new web site, www.garrettbradley.com, Bradley hopes to inform voters of his background, campaign activities and positions on issues facing the 3rd Plymouth District.

"I propose to bring active, responsive leadership to the 3rd Plymouth District," Bradley stated. "And that starts with this campaign."

For more information about Bradley and his campaign, call Michael Salerno at the Bradley headquarters at (781) 740-7272 or check out the web site at www.garrettbradley.com.

McKenna kickoff

The committee to elect Mary Anne McKenna, candidate for State Representative for Hingham, Hull and Cohasset, held its "kick-off" campaign fund-raiser Friday, May 5. The event, held at the South Shore Country Club, was attended by nearly 200 people, Republicans and Democrats alike.

"The evening was a terrific success," McKenna said. "From the Highland bag-pipers to the political satire of Steve Sweeney, everyone seemed to have a great time."

McKenna addressed the serious side of Massachusetts politics when she drove home the point that the citizens of Massachusetts are better served when there is balance in the Legislature.

"This is a Republican seat and a Republican district - we believe in fiscal and social responsibility." Noting that nearly 80 percent of the Massachusetts Legislature is controlled by the majority (Democratic) party, McKenna said, "If our two-party system of government is to survive, we need to keep the Republican seats we have, and work to build upon that base in the upcoming presidential election cycle."

McKenna introduced her 10-year-old daughter Maeve, as "my closest and dearest friend. She is a straight-A student at South Elementary, and is a member of the recent Hingham G.A.L.S. Championship basketball team."

For more information or to volunteer with the McKenna campaign, call Mary Anne at 749-5004, Billy Ramsey at 749-2532, or Nancy Wilkinson at 383-0187.

SENATE RACE NOTEBOOK

LeClair picks up Haley endorsement

By Jeanne M. Rideout
STAFF WRITER

This is another exciting week as a sizzling summer of campaigning in the race for the Democratic nomination for the Plymouth-Norfolk District Senate seat approaches.

The two Democratic contenders for the Senate who will be on September's primary election ballot are announcing endorsements of their candidacies and planning campaign events. State Representative Paul Haley, D-Weymouth, has come out in support of Ted LeClair, while Jim Cantwell is kicking off his campaign this Saturday, May 13, with events in Weymouth and East Braintree, when he will be announcing endorsements from community leaders.

State Senate candidate Ted LeClair, D-Marshfield, announced the endorsement of state Representative Paul Haley, D-Weymouth.

Haley is the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee and is Weymouth's most prominent Democratic elected official.

"I am strongly supporting Ted LeClair's candidacy because of the intelligence, character and integrity that he will bring to this important position," Haley said. "Ted is a person who has shown through varied life experience that he has the skills to be an effective legislator."

Haley went on to say he and LeClair have similar backgrounds.

"Both of us have served as naval officers, and I know of Ted's commitment to hard work and public service," Haley said. "Ted has worked hard for everything he has achieved, he has never been handed anything and he will be the type of fighter that our Senate district needs on Beacon Hill."

Cantwell campaign

Highlighting his 16 years of experience working with community leaders in Cohasset and throughout the South Shore, State Senate candidate Jim Cantwell will conduct a whirlwind tour of the Plymouth-Norfolk district this Saturday to officially announce his campaign for State Senate. Cantwell, a former aide to U.S. Rep. Bill Delahunt and Norfolk County Assistant District Attorney, will be at the Cohasset Commons at noon. "This is a first-of-its kind event for a State Senate candidate," stated Agnes McCann, Cohasset field director. "It underscores Jim's support in both Cohasset and the entire region."

This week, Cantwell also announced his campaign leadership in Cohasset. Fred Koed and Agnes McCann will be the Cohasset field directors. Koed is a Cohasset Selectman and Democratic State Committee Representative. McCann is the Democratic Town Committee Chair and is a Library Trustee. Cantwell also announced that Stephen O'Keefe would be his campaign manager. O'Keefe is a former field coordinator for both Scott Harshbarger's gubernatorial campaign in Massachusetts and Al Gore's presidential campaign in New Hampshire and Massachusetts.

Cantwell also announced that Stephen O'Keefe will be his campaign manager. O'Keefe is a former field coordinator for both Scott Harshbarger's gubernatorial campaign in Massachusetts and Al Gore's presidential campaign in New Hampshire and Massachusetts.

State Rep. Frank Hynes and Democratic Town Committee chairmen from throughout the Plymouth-Norfolk district will sponsor a fundraiser for Cantwell on Thursday, May 25, at 7 p.m., at the Weymouth Elks Hall on Route 53. New teen center director puts out welcome mat

Hopes more youths will use facility

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The new director at The Garage feels almost like she's back home again.

Kerri Rowell, who recently took over the reins at the teen center behind the Red Lion Inn, lives in Whitman. But the Hingham native worked after school and summers for years for the Hingham recreation department.

So coming to Cohasset as the part-time coordinator to conduct activities and supervise the teen center isn't too much of a reach for the 24-year-old.

"I love Cohasset," she says. "It's a beautiful town and I love this facility."

About $40,000 was raised privately to transform the old DPW garage into the new teen center — dubbed The Garage — that opened last fall. Inmates through the Norfolk County Work Release Program performed much of the construction at no cost.

And although the place was quiet Saturday during the interview, Rowell is excited about the interest that local youths are showing in the new teen center. A middle-school dance held there two weeks ago attracted 105 kids that was up from the 60 who attended a month before that, she says.

Rowell, who is studying early education administration at Massasoit Community College in Brockton, worked for six years as a preschool teacher at the L'il Munchkins day-care center in Scituate. In addition to being teen center director, she will double this summer as pre-school director for the Summer Playground program offered by Cohasset recreation.

It is no surprise that the job posting for the teen center position at the education department at Massasoit caught her eye. Involvement in recreation runs in her family.

Rowell's mother, Pam Rowell of Hingham, is the recreation director in Pembroke and also served as a recreation commissioner in Hingham for 12 years.

Cohasset Recreation Department director Jack Worley says Rowell has the perfect blend of age and experience.

"She is a young adult whom the kids can relate to," he says. "And she has had experience working with young people before.

"She also came in with good ideas and concepts."

The teen center position, which the recreation department has budgeted for up to 19 hours a week, pays $13.75 an hour.

Rowell said she is impressed with Cohasset parents who introduce themselves when they drop their children off.

"Some of the parents are still skeptical about what's going on. I understand," she says. "But they all introduce themselves, they've been great."

Rowell hopes that by attracting the sixth and seventh graders now — that when they get to be eighth and ninthgraders, they'll continue to use the teen center.

"We target the middle school group," she says. Though Rowell quickly points out that a couple of upperclassmen at the high school helped chaperone the dance.

Rowell says while the dances are a hit, she wants to increase the number of kids that just hang out at The Garage, which is equipped with TVs, pool tables and a variety of arcade games. She said a corps group of 10 to 15 are regulars.

"I wish more kids would utilize the center," she says. "But that will come."

Rowell is planning and end-of-school dance, barbecues and may even interesting a traveling rock climbing wall from a company in Maine to attract attention.

She's noticed that some of the Cohasset kids are bringing their friends in from Scituate, which has no teen center, just to hang out and talk.

"They're starting to say, 'Hey Kerri, what's up?'", she laughs. "Kids need space but they also need control and guidance."

While Rowell focuses on functions and activities at The Garage, recreation department director Worley handles administration responsibilities over the operation. The nine-member Youth Resources Committee, a town-appointed board, continues to provide leadership and makes policy over the teen center.

For specific hours at The Garage that is currently open Friday and Saturday afternoons and evenings, and for upcoming activities, call the recreation center at 383-4109.

Kerri Rowell is the new director at the teen center.

Boys lacrosse near playoffs

Six down, two to go. The Cohasset High School boys' varsity lacrosse team took a big step toward qualifying for the MIAA tournament on Friday by knocking off Pilgrim Conference rival Barnstable 13-6

Led by junior midfielder Ronan Buick's four goals freshman Curt Kahn's first hat trick, and sophomore attackman Peter Kovach's two goals and four assists, Cohasset outscored the Red Raiders 6-1 in the second quarter to pick up the Skippers' sixth win of the season.

At 6-4, Cohasset needs two more wins in its final six games to return to post-season play for the first time since 1997.

"We had a big conference win, away from home, and fought through some adversity."
Boys lacrosse coach Paul Sporn

"We had a big conference win, away from home, and fought through some adversity," said Coach Paul Sporn. "We suited up only one senior, and lost midfielder Robert Hickey early in the first half when he was cross checked in the head. The rest of the freshmen — Kahn, Matt Davis, Nick Spirito and John Durkin— really came through for us."

The squad's lone senior, defenseman Bill Good, anchored a defense that neutralized Barnstable's big gun, Anthony Spano, and controlled play for most of the game.

Sophomore goalie Kyle Weber had 16 saves in his second varsity start this year, and junior Geoff McWilliams was effective in leading the Skippers' clears.

Given only ten minutes to warm up after a 90-minute bus ride, the Skippers started sluggishly, getting an opening score from sophomore Jason Moore, but found themselves tied with the Red Raiders 2-2 after the first quarter.

The Skippers exploded in the second quarter, outscoring their hosts 6-1 with Kovach, Buick, Kahn and sophomore Paul Previte all firing shots into the net.

"In the second half, except for the first few minutes, we controlled the pace of the game," said Sporn. "Kovach and Buick ran our offense as well as I've seen it this year. The second midfield of Dave DeVito, Lane Forrer and Sean Chase did a terrific job."

Besides Buick, Kovach and Kahn, other scorers were Moore and Previte, both with a pair of goals.

DeVito, Kahn and Buick each had an assist.

This week, Cohasset was to travel to Pilgrim rival Sandwich on Tuesday. The Skippers go to Norwell on Friday.

"Big games," said Sporn. "We'd like to come out of them with at least one win."

Leahy shines for Providence

Cohasset's Ken Leahy, in action against Brown University, recently became Providence College's all-time lacrosse scorer.

Becomes Friars' all-time leading lacrosse scorer

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Local athletes often go on to collegiate competition, but unless they play a big-time revenue sport like football or basketball, little news of their exploits ever reaches their hometown.

Former Cohasset High lacrosse star Ken Leahy has a story which deserves to be told.

With three goals in Providence College's 10-3 loss to Brown University on April 18, Leahy, a senior at Providence College, became the school's all-time leading lacrosse scorer. His 185th point (112 goals, 73 assists) broke the mark of former teammate Matt Pymm.

Leahy said he never expected to have such a stellar lacrosse career at Providence.

"It certainly wasn't anything I thought about as a freshman," said Leahy about the scoring record. "I just hoped to do well and get playing time. I just took it game by game and season by season. I never wanted to look too far into the future."

Providence lacrosse coach Chris Burdick has only coached Leahy for the last two years, but two years have been enough to convince him of Leahy's importance to the program.

"He's been a captain here the last two years, and he's been such a leader for us on the field," Burdick said. "At Providence, he's been the guy other teams try to stop. He's such a stable guy and a steady offensive power. I can count on him for four or five points every game, and he can erupt at any time for six or seven. On and off the field, he's exemplary. He's going to be very tough to replace."

Leahy was recently the recipient of one of Providence's highest athletic honors. He won the Sine Qua Non Award, which is given annually to a male and female athlete who have distinguished themselves but not received the proper recognition for their accomplishments. The Latin translation of the award is 'without whom, there would be nothing.'

Girls perform well in track championship

Flaherty takes league high jump crown

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The high winds at Monday's South Shore League girls track meet at Norwell High didn't hold back Cohasset high jumpers Catherine Flaherty and Morgan Hurley.

Evidently, neither did gravity, as the pair soared to lead the Skippers to a sweep of the top two places in the league high jump competition.

Both juniors, the pair is certain to return next year to try to repeat the feat.

Cohasset nearly swept the top three spots in the event, but Hanover's Kelly Pierce narrowly edged out the Skippers' Ashley Ulmer for fourth place.

The high jump wasn't the only event in which the Cohasset girls excelled on Monday.

Junior Maureen Equi just missed winning the 300-meter low hurdles, but was bested by Carver's Christina Doherty.

Hurley showed why she was an appropriate choice for the South Shore League all-star team, taking her second top-three finish in the 300 hurdles, and scoring 14 important points for Cohasset.

Yet another junior, Kathleen McCarthy, had a hard-luck sixth place in the long jump competition.

McCarthy barely missed placing much higher on two of her three jumps in the final, but narrowly had her foot past the board on both jumps, causing her to foul.

While the junior class performed extremely well on Monday, the team's freshmen served notice that they will bear watching in the future as well.

Meaghan Rizzotti destroyed the competition in the 200-meter dash semifinals, showing she would be a force to be reckoned with in the final.

She was indeed that, and lost a close race to Norton's Meghan O'Donnell. Still, the eight points she earned for her second-place finish were among the most scored by any freshman at the league meet.

Fellow freshman Maura O'Brien will be a sprinter to watch in the future, as she finished second in the girls 100-meter dash.

Another freshman, Deirdra Bigley, scored a third-place finish in the freshman 400-meter dash, rounding out a great day for the team's rookies. The future does indeed look bright.

Fighting for their playoff lives

The Cohasset High School girls' varsity lacrosse team hit a speed bump in its effort to qualify for the MIAA tournament tying Falmouth 7-7 when the winning goal was disallowed after a protest at the game's conclusion.

The Lady Skippers had charged back from a 5-1 first half deficit and taken a 6-5 lead with less than four minutes to play after co-captain Jackie Kahn scored.

Falmouth answered with 1:49 left, but co-captain Jenny Chastain pushed Cohasset in front again 30 seconds later.

With 16 seconds left on the clock, Falmouth tied it up once again. Cohasset won the draw, and Chastain drove to the goal, only to be fouled.

Instead of blowing a whistle, which would have stopped the clock, the official dropped a flag.

As time ran out, Chastain was awarded a penalty shot, which she scored. Falmouth protested, and, after several minutes of discussion, the goal was disallowed.

Kahn and Chastain each had three goals to lead the Lady Skippers. Sophomore Kristin Sheerin tallied the other score.

Freshman Gia Petrakis had seven saves in goal for the Skippers.

Traveling to New Bedford last Thursday, Cohasset had no problem, rolling over their opponents 15-4.

Chastain and Sheerin led the scoring parade with four goals apiece, while Kahn and freshman Maura McKenney had two each.

Freshmen Sera Genovese, Katie Portanova and Yazi Afshar also scored. Chastain and Genovese each had a pair of assists, while Sheerin, McKenney, Kahn, and sophomores Carlie Carter, Suzanne Lynner and Jackie Goines each had an assist.

Playing goal for the first time this year was junior Kelly Lordan, who anchored a defense that included seniors Emily Libby and Caitlin Stansell, junior Maggie O'Connor, and sophomore Maggie O'Neil.

The Lady Skippers, 3-5-1 on the season, were to host Martha's Vineyard on Tuesday and travel to Hingham on Thursday.

recognized that and didn't have a problem with it. But it's a wonderful award."

One of the best parts about Leahy's lacrosse career at Providence has been the ability of his family to witness nearly every Friar game in his four years.

"I don't think they've missed one in a few years," Leahy said of his parents, Barbara and David, who have made numerous trips to both home and away games over the last four years. "When I was looking at schools, location was a big factor. I wanted my parents to be able to see me play."

Last week, Ken played his last collegiate game against Albany. As the last seconds ticked off the clock, his father said he felt a great deal of pride in his son's accomplishments.

"It was hard to believe it was our last hurrah seeing him on the lacrosse field," David Leahy said. "I've been so impressed with his whole manner of play and discipline. It takes an amazing commitment to play an NCAA Div. 1 sport. When we go to these games, a ton of kids and parents would come up to us with compliments about Kennie. A lot of people recognized what he was doing and the kids had a lot of respect for him."

Barbara Leahy said attending Providence is one of the best decisions Ken has made in his young life.

"His playing for Providence has been a pleasure for all of us," she said. "Kennie is very fortunate to have played there. The fan support is unbelievable for lacrosse. It has a nice feel more like a family than a school. He's made a number of strong friendships with the lacrosse players at PC. They'll be lifelong friends."

Ken is not the only member of the Leahy family currently at Providence. Younger brother Patrick is a sophomore at the school, and leads the cheers at Friar lacrosse games.

"He definitely holds the title as Super Fan in our family," Barbara said of Patrick. "He and his entire circle of friends go to the games. It's been fun to see them together."

Leahy actually began playing lacrosse because of the involvement of his older brother, Dave, in the sport. A 1994 graduate of Cohasset High who went on to play lacrosse at the University of New Hampshire, Dave took up the sport when he reached the middle school in seventh grade.

A fifth-grader at the time, Ken decided to focus on lacrosse.

"All of them were baseball players at first," Barbara said of her four sons (Patrick has a twin brother, Tommy, now a sophomore at Loyola College in Maryland). "Once David came home one day and said he wanted to play lacrosse, they all became lacrosse players."

Ken played both soccer and lacrosse in his four years at Cohasset High and captained the lacrosse team in 1996, his senior season. When deciding where to play in college, he said Providence's membership in the MAAC, one of the foremost conferences for Div. 1 lacrosse, was a big draw.

"I love the competitive nature of lacrosse at Providence," he said. "You can go out and play against the best competition around. That's what I wanted to do."

What makes Leahy's success at Providence even more remarkable is the fact that the school's lacrosse program is one of only five or six in the country which does not offer scholarships. Though it can be trying at times, Leahy said he relishes the challenge of playing scholarship teams.

"Every game we play is kind of an uphill battle, but you play for those moments when you can upset the scholarship schools," he said.

Barbara said fighting for every victory will serve Ken well in his life after lacrosse.

"One of the most beneficial things he's gained by playing in college is a healthy perspective on things," she said. "He can give it his all and play as hard as he can, but he's able to move on once the game is over, win, lose or draw."

Ken led the Friars to a very respectable 4-5 league record in the MAAC this season. Despite the awards he has received and his standing as the school's all-time leading scorer, he deflects the praise to his teammates.

"I've played with a lot of good players who have been there to help me out," he said. "I've been very fortunate to stay healthy and be on the field for a lot of games."

"He's modest almost to a fault," Barbara said of Ken's reluctance to praise himself on his outstanding lacrosse career. "He's just not self-important at all or full of himself. Other parents will come up and congratulate us on things he's done, and we won't even have known about it. He doesn't think he's a big deal."

Little League kicks off another season

"I have done everything they [the Little League Coordinators] have asked me to do except 'umpire'," Murray joked.

The "Majors" which ranges from ages nine to 12, is the most competitive level of Little League in Cohasset.

It is comprised of six teams, the Rangers, Athletics, Dodgers, Cardinals, Pirates, and Red Sox.

"I am looking forward to a good season," said Bill Grimm, who has coached the Cardinals for four years, and has been a Little League coach for a total of ten years.

As reigning champions, the members of last year's Cardinals received their trophies during the Parade ceremony.

Just as thrilling, they were able to ride in the Glenn Pratt antique fire truck along the parade route, as has every champion since the parade started.

Though the Cohasset Little League has been around for quite some time, there have been very few changes over the years.

Murray, who probably has seen the most Little League games of anyone in Cohasset, said the purity of Little League baseball still remains.

"My father was one of the founders of the Little League, and my sons played in Little League. Uniforms have changed, but baseball is baseball," she said.

"The financial stability has improved for the league over the last five years," said Peter Berg, who, through the involvement of his three children has coached baseball for 11 years. "[The Little League] is a program we are very proud of.

Mike O'Connell, entering his fifth year as coach of the Rangers, agreed. "It is still the same game, and it has always been the same," he said. "I played at Barnes. What gives baseball a bad name is when the parents start yelling at the umpires, but it can be a wonderful couple of hours."

For many of the coaches and players, the baseball/softball season is the best time of year.

"If you are commuting from Boston to Cohasset, you should stop off," O'Connell said. "Get a hot dog, or a box of popcorn, watch a little baseball. And on a warm summer night, it can't get any better than that."

WEEKLY ROUNDUP

BOYS TENNIS

The boys' tennis team defeated Randolph last Thursday by a score of 4-1.

Jeff Scribner and Jeff Garber remained undefeated at second doubles in the victory, which brings the Skippers' record to 2-2 on the season.

The Skippers play at Carver today (Thursday) and are on the road again next Thursday in Abington to close out league play.

Cohasset defeated Abington 73-63 in a close meet last Monday to keep the Skippers undefeated (5-0) in South Shore League competition.

The boys took part Tuesday in the league meet at Carver, but results were unavailable as of press time. Complete coverage of the meet can be found in next week's Mariner.

Against Abington, Brian Krupczak and Craig Parker were instrumental in the victory.

Krupczak won the high jump, triple jump, and 200-meter dash, while Parker won the shot put, discus, and 100-meter dash.

Both Krupczak and Parker were part of the victorious 4x100 relay team, meaning they combined for 35 of the team's 73 points.

Both will likely be large figures in the upcoming Principal's Meet and state competition in Norwell.

GOLF

The Cohasset boys golf team dropped matches this week to Carver, Abington, and Norwell, but a couple of Skipper sophomores performed well in the losses.

Sophomore Will Prendergast shot a 10-over-par 45 to medal in the tri-match with Abington and Norwell, while both Prendergast and Will Moody scored in the 7-2 loss to Carver.

"Will Moody's been playing very well lately," said coach Clark Chatterton. "His improvement since the beginning of the season has been outstanding."

A match Monday against Hanover was cancelled due to inclement weather.

Chatterton said the cancellation may have been for the best.

"The second lead story on the news was about a golfer getting hit by lightning in Pocasset," Chatterton said. "I'm glad we got the kids out of there."

Summer Arts at Derby

Registration is now open for "Summer Arts at Derby 2000" at Derby Academy in Hingham. Summer Arts is a comprehensive five-week arts program for ages eight to 15. The program is staffed by professional artist/teachers and includes more than 90 courses in drama, visual arts, newspaper and creative writing, dance, sports, gymnastics, photography, music, animation and martial arts. A newspaper is printed every day and a full-scale musical is produced. Students choose their own schedules and there is a daily free-choice period to try new things. The program culminates in an all-day Arts Festival celebrating the talents of the students through performances and exhibits of their work.

The goal of the program is to allow students to explore a wide range of activities and to encourage their individual talents. Campers from more than 20 communities share a special summer through the arts.

Summer Arts announces the addition of three new buildings to the campus this year, including a new theatre, gymnasium and dining hall. The 311-seat theatre is acoustically designed for young people, and is fully equipped with a computerized light and sound system. The new gymnasium houses two basketball courts and the students will enjoy a spacious new dining hall.

The dates of the program are June 26 to July 28; 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Friday. Tuition for the five-week program is $1,400; enrollment is limited. For applications and more information, call Thalia McMillion, director, at (781) 740-4766.

WORSHIP NEWS

Memorial weekend

The third annual Memorial Service of Light will be held on Cohasset Common Sunday evening, May 28 (moved from Festival Weekend). Beginning at 8 p.m., there will be inspirational music as people gather around the Common Pond and help assemble and distribute the luminaria bags. The Cohasset clergy will then share a few special readings. Following the lighting of the luminaria, the clergy will read the names of all those who have passed away in the town of Cohasset over the past 12 months. In a few moments of silence, we will all lift our thoughts to those gone before us and then close with prayer.

Let's make breathing easier on the South Shore!

As a health educator, we are always educating our students on the dangers of second-hand smoke in the home. They sometimes have a difficult time presenting the information to their parents. But I believe there is progress being made. Some parents have agreed to smoke outside their home and others only in certain areas of the home. It's a good start.

Is your home smoke-free yet? Together we can make breathing easier in Cohasset.

Michael Gill, Cohasset school health administrator

HSO pops concert

The final concerts of the season for the Hingham Symphony Orchestra will be held at 7:30 p.m. Saturday, May 20, and 4 p.m. Sunday, May 21, at Temple Shá Aray Shalom Auditorium, 1112 Main St. Because of the crowded success of last year's pops concert, HSO has added a Sunday afternoon performance and will limit sales to each concert to 300 tickets. These festive pops concerts will explore music of various national heritages, including Dvorak's "Slavonic Dances," Vaughan Williams' "English Folksong Suite," and works by Rossini, Bach, Faure, Strauss, Mascagni and Vivaldi. The program highlights guitar soloist Apostoles Pareskevas, featured in Vivaldi's "Guitar Concerto in D" and a commissioned work by composer-in-residence Alexander Kalogeras. Table seating, a selection of wine and refreshments, and a special musical raffle will contribute to the air of celebration, as HSO wraps up an exciting, successful season. Tickets ($25 adult, $10 youth 18 and under) and reserved table seating are available at the Hingham Public Library, Cards & Shards in Cohasset, or by calling HSO at 740-5694.

Springtime walk

On Mother's Day, Sunday, May 14, from 1:30 to 3 p.m., meet The Trustees of Reservations' new executive director, Andrew Kendall, and explore the Milliken Path in Whitney & Thayer Woods in Cohasset on a guided springtime walk, free.

Meet at 1:30 p.m. at the entrance on Route 3A. Parking area is opposite Sohier Street. For information call Marge Balzotti at (781) 821-2977.

Music festival

As part of its Sunday Concert Series, St. Stephen's Church in Cohasset is presenting a Festival of Early Music Sunday, May 21, at 3 p.m. Performers on this program will include Baroque flautist, Na'ama Lion, Baroque cellist Sarah Freiberg, and organist-harpsichordist Fredrick Guzasky.

Composers represented include Frescobaldi, members of the Bach family, and Anna Bon di Venezia, an 18th century female Italian composer whose works are little known. Dr. Lion has performed in Israel, Europe and the U.S. and is on the faculty of the Longy School in Cambridge, the Brookline Music School, and Harvard. Dr. Freiberg is a member of the Philharmonia Baroque Orchestra of San Francisco and is principal cellist of the Portland Baroque Orchestra, and can be heard on numerous recordings on labels Harmonia Mundi, Koch and Bayer. Dr. Guzasky is on the faculty of the Boston Conservatory. Bridgewater State College, is Director of Music at St. Stephen's, and regularly teaches at the St. Petersburg Conservatory in Russia.

Donations will be accepted.

The church is located at 16 Highland Ave. in Cohasset, is handicapped accessible, and plenty of parking is available in the nearby village parking lot. For information, call: 383-1083.

'Art With a View'

Art lovers and gardeners alike will relish the South Shore Art Center's "Art With a View," an event that includes plein air painting by well-known artists and the works of 20 sculptors at some of the most beautiful estates in New England. The two-day garden tour, a walk-through of eight estates, four each in Cohasset and Hingham, will take place May 19 and 20 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. It will conclude with an auction of the newly painted works and some of the sculptures during a black-tie dinner in an elegant federal townhouse in Hingham May 20.

In Cohasset, sweeping views, tiered lawns stretching to the sea, gazebos and hidden gardens, will tantalize tour goers, as will an ancient rose garden, dating back to the late 1700s. Rock gardens and fieldstone walls on the Gulf River, in company with a giant larch tree and other species of pines, will conjure up mountain images rather than those of the shoreline, with which Cohasset is generally associated.

In Hingham, four historic townhouses, their gardens in full bloom, will offer beautiful landscaping, with arbors, gates, pathways, staircases and ancient stone steps. By their very size, Hingham homes dwarf their surrounding gardens, yet it is the art of shade gardens and what they may produce that ignites interest.

For art fanciers and garden lovers, to observe 20 artists at work within secluded estates, as well as sculpture pieces selected for display during the event provides for an unforgettable day.

Art With a View, garden tours with an artistic twist, begin both days at 10 a.m. and continue throughout the afternoon until 4 p.m. Tickets are $35, $30 in advance and for SSAC members. The dinner auction at 7 p.m. May 20 is $125 per person. Reservations for the dinner party are necessary and are limited to 150 people on a first-come-first-serve basis. Tickets, brochures and maps may be picked up at the South Shore Art Center on either day of the event. Complimentary refreshments will be served at the center from 11:30 a.m. to 2 p.m. both days. Tickets are available at the South Shore Art Center, 119 Ripley Rd., Cohasset, or by calling 781-383-2787.

Proceeds from Art With a View, the Art Center's major spring fundraising event, will benefit operating expenses of the center, a non-profit organization dependent on contributions for one-third of its operating budget.

Tragedy tomorrow, comedy tonight!

Hingham Music Theatre brings Stephen Sondheim's musical comedy, "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum," to the newly renovated stage of Hingham High School May 5, 6, 12 and 13 at 8 p.m., and May 7 at 2 p.m. For tickets, group rates, and other information, call Debby Higgins at 781-749-4851.

For more information about HCMT and its 51-year history, call Joel Leonard at 781-749-6431. Hingham Civic Music Theatre is a non-profit organization serving Hingham and the entire South Shore.

Palmer featured at Staircase Gallery

"There's always music in my paintings," explains artist Dorothy Palmer, whose paintings are on display at South Shore Conservatory's Staircase Gallery through the end of June. "It's mostly the music of Mozart because he's my favorite."

"The viewer finishes the painting and has to hear it," she says, further explaining the placement of music in her paintings. When she paints, she purposely includes objects which touch the senses. "I want them to smell the salt air and taste the champagne. The senses are very important when I work."

Palmer, a South Shore Art Center artist, has taught and lectured both here and in France. She teaches not the art of painting, but the art of seeing. "Anyone can use the media, but not everyone can see." Her teaching is much about light and texture.

An exhibitor of international renown, Palmer was invited to participate in The American Painters in Paris Exhibition Art Expo. The White House honored her with an invitation to create Easter Artworks currently on exhibit at The Smithsonian.

The Staircase Gallery is free of charge and open to the public. Gallery hours are Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., and Saturdays, 9 a.m. to noon. South Shore Conservatory is located at One Conservatory Drive in Hingham. For more information, call 749-7565, Ext. 16.

SSAC garden tour brings art, architecture and nature together

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

The show is called Art With a View, but it may as well be called 'Art the Way it is Supposed to be Shown.'

The unique art tour sponsored by the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset is being put on for the first time in two years, but the term 'show' doesn't really do justice to the event. As Art With a View co-chairman Stephanie Middleton of Hingham, says it's more like an experience.

"The event is basically a two day art and garden tour," said Middleton. She said the show will run on both May 19 and 20 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Middleton said this art tour is unique because it will be held at various extravagant residences in both Hingham in Cohasset. Art With a View will take visitors to eight different estates in the two towns and through their incredible gardens, Middleton said.

The estates chosen for the tour are sure to make some jaws drop, Middleton noted. Several the homes are historic, dating back to the 18th century. Middleton said she feels the overall aura of the homes should mix well with the other artistic and elegant elements of the two-day event.

While the homes and gardens are in themselves attractions, art comes to the tour in the form of 20 well-known artists who will

Garland tribute comes to Company Theatre

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Judy Garland became a superstar when she was still in her teens. The singer and actress lived almost her entire life in the often intense glare of the show business spotlight. Her battles with alcohol and prescription drug addiction and her many failed marriages were fodder for the gossip mill, but never succeeded in eclipsing her status as one of the greatest female pop vocalists of the 20th century. Although she died at age 47 in London in 1969, Garland's legend lives on.

This weekend, Norwell's Company Theatre will present Broadway entertainer Rebecca Ann Lillie in a one-woman tribute show entitled "Judy Garland: The Memories, The Moments." The show tells Garland's story in the first person and features 15 of her best-known songs including "The Trolley Song," "Get Happy" and, of course, "Somewhere Over the Rainbow."

"I speak directly from Judy's voice, using her own words taken from the transcripts of old Jack Paar and Dick Cavett television interviews. There are video montages of newsreel footage which help put the audience back in time. We also do our very best with wigs and costumes to set the mood," Lillie explains. "There were times when Judy wasn't at her best, but I prefer to focus on the good things. Our show isn't rose-colored, but I do feel very protective of Judy. What I try to do is to pay tribute to an incredible performer."

Lillie's admiration for Garland took root early. "I was probably about eight or nine years old when I saw 'The Wizard of Oz' for the first time," she recalled last week in a telephone interview from her home in New York. Like most little girls, Lillie related to Garland's portrayal of the innocent, pigtailed Dorothy. It was another early Garland film, however, that inspired the North Carolina native to pursue a career as a performer. "Judy was just great to watch in 'Babes in Arms.' I really admired her energy in that film."

Since graduating from the Cincinnati Conservatory, Lillie has put her own energy to work — often in stage shows based on Garland's films. "I was in my early 20's, when I first started doing some of Judy's roles. I've done both 'The Wizard of Oz' and "Meet Me in St. Louis.'

Doing Garland's roles seemed to do something for Lillie, too. "Even in the very beginning, people would come up to me after a show and tell me how much I sounded like Judy. It was a real compliment, especially when they said I sounded like a young Judy Garland."

A few years back, Lillie teamed with stage director Derek Woods to create a one-woman show about Garland's life, entitled "Why Then, Oh Why Can't I." Although she often takes on other projects — including the national tour of "The Hoagy Carmichael Centennial" which played New Bedford's Zeiterion Theatre in March — Lillie regularly returns to one incarnation or another of her Garland show. "I have to say, I am Rebecca first. Judy is just something I do, because I really love to sing as Becky, too. Although even in my own cabaret act, I do a medley of Judy's hits."

Lillie has no trouble understanding or explaining Garland's enduring legend. "Every word Judy Garland sang came directly from her heart. She had tremendous intensity as a performer."

An intensity that Lillie found daunting while she was preparing to portray Garland for the first time. "When I first started, I approached it as an actress playing a role. I had tremendous fear that I wouldn't be able to pull it off. Even now, I always go at it like I'm playing a character. This way, I can identify with Judy in a more honest way."

While Lillie enjoys performing all of Garland's songs, one stands out for her. "My favorite moment in the show is when I sing 'The Man That Got Away.' The illusion is right there and everything works perfectly to take you right back to 'A Star is Born.' It is really where I get the closest to Judy."

Lillie also got close to Garland when she met the performer's youngest daughter, Lorna Luft, while both were performing at the same casino. "Lorna was very nice to me. She didn't want to see my show, because she thought it might make her uncomfortable. We did spend some time together, though, and she told me lots of wonderful stories about her Mom."

(Rebecca Ann Lillie will perform "Judy Garland: The Memories, The Moments" this Saturday and Sunday at the Company Theatre, Route 228, Norwell. For tickets and information, call 781/871-2787.)

Rediscovering Chicken Salad

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

One summer day in the 1960s, I was haying with a Vermont farmer and he said, "Let's take a walk." We stretched our legs and walked down the dirt road to a spring which flowed from a gravel bank. Having had nothing but second-rate tap water all my life, my first taste from this wild spring was a revelation, elevating this common drink to a higher plane. Chicken salad is much the same. For those of us used to the ubiquitous puréed scoopfuls offered at diners and ho-hum sandwich shops, the real thing is no less of a surprise, full of competing flavors, chunky textures, and lively bits of surprising ingredients.

The first question, of course, is how to cook the chicken. You can boil it, poach it, or roast it. (Broiling makes for tough meat and grilling is not always possible.) The boiled chicken was a bit too soft although the flavor was good. Poached chicken (I used a flavored chicken stock for the poaching liquid) was good but is fussy – the heat level must be constantly adjusted and, of course, one needs to prepare the liquid.

Roasted chicken was the winner since it had more real chicken flavor, the texture was good, and it is a relatively simple method. Roasting with both the skin and bones produces the most flavor and the moistest meat. I used my standard roasting method, which is 375 degrees for about an hour.

The next issue was the salad itself. Really large chunks of chicken make for a sloppy sandwich so I settled on a half-inch dice. (Anything smaller feels like tuna salad.) For binder, I tried the usual suspects – mayonnaise, yogurt, sour cream, buttermilk, and cream cheese, both alone and in combination. I settled on mayonnaise as I did with my egg salad recipe. Two-thirds cup of celery was great but capers, pickles, apples, grapes, cucumbers, and onion were all unwelcome in a basic chicken salad, although some of these ingredients work nicely in variations. Lemon juice perked up the flavor as did 1 1/2 teaspoons of Dijon mustard. For herbs, scallion was the winner, and salt and pepper rounded out the flavors.

For a variation, I turned to a curried chicken salad and I tried a method listed in the "New Joy of Cooking." The curry powder is cooked briefly in a skillet with a small amount of oil and then added to the mayonnaise. This greatly enhanced the flavor. I then added apple, raisins, and almonds. Be sure to use fresh, high quality curry powder for the best flavor.

HOMEMADE CHICKEN SALAD

This is a snap to make – you can even purchase a roasted chicken if you like at the market. I often roast two chickens at a time, serving one for dinner and using the other for chicken salad the next day. Although the quality of the chicken is not as good, you can also simmer a cut up chicken in 2 1/2 quarts of water for 30 to 40 minutes, or until the meat is cooked. (You can add vegetables and herbs such as celery, parsley, and one or two carrots along with the chicken, if you like, but this is not necessary.) Use the liquid for homemade stock and the meat for this recipe.

1 3 1/2-pound roasted chicken, skinned, boned, chilled, and chopped into 1/2-inch chunks (4 cups)

2/3 cup finely chopped celery, about 2 medium ribs

/cup finely sliced scallion, about 1 large fl cup mayonnaise

1 tablespoon lemon juice

1 fi teaspoons Dijon mustard

1 teaspoon salt

Freshly ground black pepper to taste

Mix all ingredients in a large bowl. Serve immediately or refrigerate overnight. Makes about 5 cups

EASY ROAST CHICKEN

Place a shallow roasting pan on the center oven rack and heat to 375 degrees. Remove pan, add a roasting rack, and place chicken on rack on its side. Roast bird for 20 minutes. Turn bird to other side and roast for 20 minutes. Turn breast side up and roast for 10 minutes. When the thickest part of the thigh reaches 165 to 170 degrees, the chicken is done, about one hour total for a 3 1/2-pound bird. Let cool. Remove skin and bones. Refrigerate until cold.

CURRIED CHICKEN SALAD VARIATION

Heat a small skillet over medium heat until hot. Add one tablespoon canola oil and two tablespoons fresh curry powder. Stir to form a paste, about 1 minute. The mixture will smoke a bit and become aromatic. Cool for 5 minutes and mix with mayonnaise. Omit celery, lemon juice, and mustard from recipe above. Add 2/3 cup chopped apple, 1/4 cup golden raisins, and 1/4 cup sliced almonds.

set up their easels at various tour destinations and paint what visitors see.

Some of the artists taking part include Donna Rossetti-Bailey, Paige Railsback, Dorit Flowers and Joreen Benebeck of Marshfield; Kimberlee Alemian, JoAnne Chittick, Ros Farbush, Lisa Marder, and Patricia McCarthy of Cohasset, and several other local talents from throughout the South Shore.

The tour closes May 20 with a black-tie "Tuscan theme" dinner at one of the featured estates in Hingham. The black-tie dinner will include an auction during which all the artwork created on the grounds during the event will be sold off.

"Rather than waiting to make the paintings available, the artists will frame the goods immediately and thus the sale will truly be a fresh paint auction," art center officials said.

"Notoriously, it's a great fundraiser for the art center," Middleton added, noting proceeds from the event go to both the artists involved and also to the operating budget of the art center. "And it's not just about gardens, beautiful homes, and artwork. It's about combining all three of those aspects. In general, people love to be invited into someone's little space."

"Some of these places have extraordinary gardens, and all of them are very different. The last time we did this. we had a very high draw. And that was without the onsite artists. This should be a great event."

Art With a View co-chairman Stephanie Middleton

Middleton said the last garden tour held by the art center was two years ago, but it did not include the on-site auction..

Middleton said in bringing back the tour, she, Bleakie, and the number of volunteers who assisted decided the event needed a new touch of elegance. Hence, the painters and the black-tie dinner were brought into the plan.

"Some of these places have extraordinary gardens, and all of them are very different," Middleton said noting that the artwork produced on the given grounds and the gardens are sure to compliment each other.

"The last time we did this, we had a very high draw. And that was without the onsite artists. This should be a great event."

Tickets for the Art With a View garden tour are $25 for art center members if they purchase them in advance. For non-members, tickets are $30 in advance. The cut-off day for ticket purchase is May 12. Tickets will be available on the day of event for $35 at the South Shore Art Center. Tickets to the Saturday evening black-tie dinner are $150 per person, $75 of which represents a tax deductible contribution to the art center. Doo-wop lives

Local promoters book R&B legends for concert in Rockland

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

"If anyone out there still thinks that doo-wop and R&B vocal groups are a thing of the past, and that all their artists are now either retired or dead, we want to prove to them that the truth is quite otherwise."

This bold declaration comes from Bill Clark, owner of Music Heaven, a CD, tape and video store specializing in vintage music and rarities of the rock 'n' roll/R&B era located on Route 138, North Easton. Clark is speaking of TRB Enterprises, a local multimedia production company that promotes classic-era doo-wop and R&B and their various still-active performers through Boston area concerts, CDs and publishing.

TRB's next move in its noble mission is this Saturday's concert offering, "The Pioneers of Rhythm & Blues," coming to Sons of Italy Hall, Route 123, Rockland. On the bill for the gala event, two of the original, group-vocal R&B legends of the late 50s/early 60s era, Willie Winfield & the Harptones and Earl Lewis & the Channels. Doors at the Hall open at 7 p.m. and the show begins at 8 p.m.

Both the Harptones and the Channels were featured in the recent PBS-TV special "Doo Wop 50," a concert program extravaganza celebrating a half-century of doo-wop and vocal-group R&B, the classic street corner harmony sound that originated in mid-century American urban neighborhoods and became one of the defining musical styles of the early rock 'n' roll years between Elvis and the Beatles. Since first airing in February, "Doo Wop 50," which also included such vintage era combos as the Cadillacs, the Cleftones, the Skyliners, the Del Vikings, the Marcels and many others, has become the most successful fundraising program in PBS history.

Clark, 60, is a longtime fan and promoter in the South Shore/Brockton area of early rock 'n' roll era music and artists through retail, concerts and as host of a current radio-show version of "Music Heaven" airing on Marshfield's WATD-FM Sundays 10 p.m.-2 a.m. He also runs TRB Enterprises as a group venture with five other area doo-wop/early-rock 'n' roll devotees, including father-and-son fans Randy and Todd Baptista, originally of New Bedford, their wives, Carol and Kristen, and Clarke's girlfriend, Claire Lineberry, of North Easton.

What the Harptones and the Channels also have in common is mastery of the smooth, elegant, 50s/early 60s group-harmony sound, a classy vocal style on a level with recent Rock and Roll Hall of Fame inductees the Moonglows and their ilk. For the Harptones, this sound netted the group their signature crossover 50s hits, "A Sunday Kind of Love" and "Life Is But a Dream," the latter dusted off a decade ago for the soundtrack of Martin Scorcese's gangster-saga Goodfellas. For the Channels, the harmony-craft scored big with their 1956 debut single "The Closer You Are" as well as later doo-wop hits such as "That's My Desire."

Serving as emcee for the show is TRB partner Todd Baptista. The 32-year-old Baptista is currently a Westport pharmacist who, until recently, was also on the WATD airwaves, hosting an oldies and classic doo-wop/R&B show with his father Randy. The younger Baptista in his way represents the newer generation of doo-wop/early R&B fans and converts, of which both he and Clarke will tell you there are a lot more than one might think.

"I first started listening to the classic doo-wop/R&B sound at about age seven, when we were living in New Bedford and my father began taking me to the oldies revival shows during the early-70s resurgence of the music," Baptista said. "I saw acts like the Shirelles, Bo Diddley, Dion, the Chiffons, Chuck Berry and many others at arenas in Seekonk, Providence and other cities nearby. Even though I was a lot younger than most of the people in the audience I just really dug the music and discovered for myself how much fun the early rock 'n' roll was. And I have vivid memories of all those performers."

"I got away from the doo-wop and early R&B for awhile, listened mostly to my own generation's music — Aerosmith and so on — and played in rock bands in high school. But then in my late teens I saw a show by the Harptones, and it turned me on to the music all over again. Just the feeling of seeing these living, breathing people, artists from a classic era who I'd only read about in textbooks, still out there was pretty amazing to me. From there I just really got into the music and wanted to find out more about it," Baptista said.

These days, Baptista seems to be doing a lot more telling than finding out about doo-wop and vocal-group R&B. With TRB Enterprises, which is named for his initials, Baptista has written, published and distributed his first book about doo-wop, titled "Group Harmony: Behind the Rhythm and the Blues." The book features interviews and insight profiles with a litany of classic-era R&B vocal groups, such as the Harptones, the Spaniels, the El Dorados, the Silhouettes, the Willows and many more who the author personally sought out and talked with in depth. Baptista, who spent some seven years working on material for his first book, is currently planning a second volume of Group Harmony. He mentioned that he also saw Elvis Presley in concert back in the early days, although "(Elvis) was overweight, out-of-shape and out-of-tune. It wasn't one of his best shows."

Clark, Baptista and friends presented their last show under the TRB banner in June, 1998 at the Holiday Inn in Taunton. That show, featuring the Harptones, Boston-based 50s group the G-Clefs, Ruth McFadden and the Willows, is described in hindsight by Clark as a success, despite some rough weather on the date affecting turnout.

Clark also wants to let it be known that in the description of the Harptones and the Channels as "original, group-vocal R&B legends," the emphasis is uncompromisingly on "original." The promoter and his TRB cohorts have come to know all too well the fraudulant current practice of concert promoters booking false, "pirate" versions of classic-era doo-wop/R&B groups on the oldies/nostalgia circuit. This shadowy music-biz trend involves the promoters manufacturing groups of unknown singers to be passed off under such well-known oldies names as the Drifters and the Coasters (to name just a couple who have been counterfeited), then grooming the act and sending it out on the circuit.

The Channels in 1956

"We feel that there are a lot of listeners into the doo-wop/R&B-era music in this area. We want to bring in original groups of this era to the local venues, let people know that these groups are still out there on the scene, and that they are the real groups," Clark said. "It's not really a money thing for us. We want to expose the music, and let audiences know that even though a lot of this era's performers are getting older and even passing away, there are still enough of them out there performing regularly and doing a great job at that."

"We'll also assure audiences that if they come to one of our shows, they're going to see the real groups as they remember, with as many group members that are still surviving," Clark said.

Tickets for "The Pioneers of Rhythm & Blues" are $25 in advance and $28 at the door the night of the show. A cash bar will also be available in the Hall during the performance.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

Most people are already familiar with astrological sun signs – those presumed indicators of personality and future. There are, however, much more telling influences, as anyone who has studied astrology knows.

I try to do something a little different with my astrological forecasts. I like to compare astrology with meteorology. Just as meteorologists predict the physical weather – if there will be sun or precipitation – an astrologer can forecast the mental and emotional weather ahead.

A meteorologist tells you whether to bring an umbrella or sunglasses to work. By charting the course of the heavens and the various effects of celestial spheres on the human condition, I can tell you what type of day we are likely to have and how people are likely to react. My goal is to help you be prepared for the week ahead.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 10

Conflicting planetary influences make for another challenging day. Keep a cool head. Go with the flow. The Leo moon continues active travel until 8:11 p.m., when it aligns with Mercury. The first quarter phase of the moon occurs at 4:00 p.m. The sun aligns with Saturn and Uranus just as Mercury did yesterday. This influence brings up the same theme. You must find a balance between personal freedom and responsibilities you have taken on. Take extra quiet time out for yourself. Through prayer and meditation you will gain deep, penetrating insights and find new solutions.

THURSDAY, MAY 11

The moon enters industrious Virgo at 8:41 a.m. Roll up your sleeves and take on a full agenda. tackle projects that have been left hanging and finish them. Clean out, reorganize, get rid of the clutter. Zero in on health, diet, physical fitness; take better care of yourself. Sidestep irritability, arguments between 4:44 and 7:44 p.m., when the moon aligns with Mars. Compliments will work better than criticism.

FRIDAY, MAY 12

The Virgo moon continues active travel all day. However, applying alignments of Mars/Neptune and Saturn/Uranus take center stage. Plan a flexible schedule. Projects may take unexpected turns. Situations may suddenly arise that demand your immediate attention. Be more sensitive to the needs of others. Volunteer your time, energy, resources to help people who are less fortunate or for causes you believe in. Look within for answers, and you'll find what you need to get back on track.

SATURDAY, MAY 13

A Virgo moon sets the stage for a productive morning. Plan to get work projects out of the way early in the day, so that you can enjoy the weekend. The moon aligns with its planetary ruler, Mercury, at 11:57 a.m. and becomes inactive. A social Libra moon takes over at 2:27 p.m. The green light goes on for new starts, particularly in your personal life. This is an ideal time for meeting people, establishing new relationships.

SUNDAY, MAY 14

At 3:11 a.m. the planet Mercury moves into Gemini remaining there until May 30. A Libra moon makes this day ideal for social activities. Visit or entertain friends. Get in touch with people you haven't heard from in a while. The green light remains on for new starts across the board.

MONDAY, MAY 15

The Libra moon aligns with Uranus at 4:54 a.m. and becomes inactive until 10:16 p.m. Rather than starting new activities, this is a day to finish old business and tie up loose ends. Stormy astrological weather is brewing; take advantage of this relatively calm period. Get back in the swing of favorite sports; spend quality time with close friends. Relax and unwind. The final windup to this month's full moon begins at 10:16 p.m., when the moon enters Scorpio.

TUESDAY, MAY 1 6

A lunar alignment to Neptune can make for a slow-starting morning. Allow extra time to get where you are going. Pay attention to details so that you don't overlook something significant. The moon travels in Scorpio and the full moon buildup continues. Applying alignments of Mercury/Neptune and Venus/Jupiter also affect the day. You can make gains developing projects that require your imagination and creativity. Follow your hunches; your instincts are on target.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 17

Gear up for a hectic day. The moon travels in intense Scorpio and forms challenging alignments to Jupiter, Venus, Uranus and Saturn. In addition, social Venus aligns with Jupiter in the morning, Uranus in the evening and Saturn early tomorrow. Others may be irritable, argumentative. Keep a low profile. The good news is that you can be extremely productive. Influences are ideal for problem-solving, making repairs or renovations. Take time out for yourself this evening. Through prayer and meditation you can gain deep, penetrating insights.

SOUTH SHORE REAL ESTATE

South Shore designer featured on HGTV

Scituate resident Cameron Snyder, CKD, president of Kitchen Concepts and RoomScapes in Norwell, was chosen from a selection of kitchen designers across the U.S. to create the Design Idea Center, which was unveiled at the Kitchen and Bath Industry Show (KBIS) in Chicago in April.

Interviews with Snyder, as well as a tour of his inspiring design, will be featured on Home and Garden TV Sunday, May 14, at 9 p.m. and midnight The program will be rerun Wednesday, May 17, 10 p.m. and 1 a.m., as well as Saturday, May 20, at 5 p.m.

The concept behind the Design Idea Center, an annual undertaking sponsored by the National Kitchen & Bath Association, is to showcase trends for kitchens and baths of the future.

Cameron Snyder

The concept behind the Design Idea Center, an annual undertaking sponsored by the National Kitchen & Bath Association, is to showcase trends for kitchens and baths of the future. This year's project incorporates a total living environment in the round with a circular fireplace in the center of that structure. The hearth can be seen and felt in the kitchen area, dining area and bedroom/bathroom spa area.

"Today there are few people who are untouched by the hectic pace of our society," explains Snyder. "Most homeowners are balancing work, children, family needs and more. The concept for this year's Design Idea Center is based on the home as oasis, a place where the residents can retreat and find comfort. We wanted to create a primary residence concept that feels like a vacation home, a calm, tranquil environment in which to cook, relax and sleep."

The spaces that would traditionally be called the bedroom and bathroom are woven together into a personal comfort zone with a spa feeling. Snyder included a whirlpool tub, steam shower and sauna to create a haven of relaxation for the end of the day.

"Simplicity is key in the design," he said. "The lack of visual clutter combined with natural elements create a space to breathe out, safe from the demands of a fast-paced lifestyle."

"Today there are few people who are untouched by the hectic pace of our society. Most homeowners are balancing work, children, family needs and more. The concept for this year's Design Idea Center is based on the home as oasis, a place where the residents can retreat and find comfort."

Cameron Snyder

Snyder minimized sharp edges, using a lot of curves and radius corners to enhance the feeling of calmness and tranquility. The materials are all chosen for their natural feeling. The built-in cabinetry throughout shows a trend that is on the rise even now on the South Shore of Boston, where built-ins are being requested to help busy homeowners organize belongings quickly and neatly.

"Taking an element like built-in cabinetry, typically found in kitchens, and using it in less traditional ways is helping to bring a feeling of simplicity to homes and keeping them clutter-free," says Snyder. "Today homeowners are looking for a place to put everything to make clean-up and storage easy and less time-consuming. This is reflected in a big way in this Design Idea Center concept."

Though many of Kitchen Concepts' South Shore kitchen design customers still request traditional and "unfitted" kitchens, Snyder expects that a more streamlined look is on the horizon for many homeowners.

For more information on designing a new kitchen or bringing built-in cabinetry into the other rooms of your home, call Kitchen Concepts at (781) 878-2400.

IN BRIEF

New consumer brochures for homebuyers and property owners available

The Massachusetts Association of Realtors (MAR) and the office of Attorney General Thomas Reilly have produced an informative brochure for real estate professionals to provide to buyers and sellers detailing Title 5 regulations of the Massachusetts Environmental Code.

The newly released Title 5 brochure entitled, "Facts for Consumers: Title 5 Septic System Regulations" provides information to homebuyers and sellers of the inspection upon transfer obligations mandated for all on-site sewage disposal systems under the Title 5 regulations.

It details when an inspection is necessary and under what conditions it is not, and notes some tell-tale signs of conditions under which an inspection may fail.

Inspector obligations are discussed as well as approximate costs for the inspection and repairs or upgrades that may be necessary.

To finance the cost of the repair or upgrade, eligible towns have betterment funds available, while home improvement loans are available through the Massachusetts Housing Finance Agency, and the U.S. Rural Housing Service offers low-interest loans. Information on the state's Title 5 Tax Credit also is provided.

Two other consumer brochures recently produced cooperatively by the Massachusetts Association of Realtors and Massachusetts Office of Consumer Affairs include "A Consumer Guide to Buying & Selling a Home in Massachusetts" and "A Consumer Guide to Landlord Rights and Responsibilities."

The 12-page brochure on buying and selling a home explains agency relationships and the role and duties of the real estate agent, buyer's and seller's rights and responsibilities, and the process by which homes are marketed and sold.

The pamphlet on landlord rights is 24 pages and offers insight on finding a good tenant, the legalities for collecting and handling the security deposit and last month's rent, the eviction process, and other duties and remedies of the landlord.

The Title 5 and the buying/selling brochures are available in packages of 100 for $25, plus tax and shipping. The Guide to Landlord Rights and Responsibilities is available in packages of 100 for $40 plus tax and shipping. Real estate agents may call the MAR Bookstore at 781/890-3700 to place an order.

Dana Baxter joins Conway's Hingham office

Dana Baxter recently joined the staff of Jack Conway and Company's Hingham real estate sales office and quickly put the firm's "neighborhood Realtor" concept into practice.

Baxter's first listing was the house across Elm Street from his own residence in Hingham. The circa 1868 New England Farmhouse, priced at $407,500, quickly went under agreement after an open house that was well attended by potential buyers.

Since joining the company, Baxter also has earned the Graduate, Realtor Institute designation from the Massachusetts Association of Realtors.

The GRI designation signifies 90 hours of advanced in-class real estate education. Realtors who have passed the GRI examinations are recognized as having attained one of the highest levels in residential real estate.

"Our company places a great emphasis on education and training," said company President Richard F. Cahill, "and we salute Dana for putting in the extra effort to earn his GRI."

Baxter said he joined Conway because of its emphasis on continuing education for agents, as well as the family atmosphere of the company, whose advertising slogan is "Your Neighborhood Realtor Since 1957."

Par-Tee to open indoor mini-golf course in Cohasset

Par-Tee miniature golf course has signed a multi-year lease on a 3,762 square-foot space at Tedeschi Plaza on Route 3A in Cohasset, announced John W. Whalen Jr., director of leasing for Tedeschi Realty Corporation in Rockland. Par-Tee, only the second indoor miniature golf course in Massachusetts, was scheduled to open May 5.

The Par-Tee course is designed, manufactured and distributed by Lomma Enterprises Corporation, a manufacturer of championship miniature golf courses. The indoor course has nine holes, each featuring two pin placements for an 18-hole play option, plus three "super challenge holes." The facility will also have a snack bar area for special celebrations such as birthday parties. In addition to catering to area children, leagues are being considered for the miniature golf course. A set of junior golf clubs will be raffled at the grand opening celebration, scheduled for May 20.

The owner, Mary Anne Crawford, is enthused to bring this recreational family pastime to the community. Par-Tee has already made a positive impact on the community in that local teenagers have been involved in the start-up process. Six teens from Cohasset High School will paint the facility's backdrop with nautical themes.

Crawford is confident that the highly visible location and its accessibility will lead to success. As a new business owner, Crawford praised the Tedeschi staff, saying, "Tedeschi Realty has been very accommodating and supportive throughout the pre-opening, business start-up process."

Par-Tee joins other notable retailers at Tedeschi Plaza including CVS, Noble's Camera, Cohasset Jewelers, Curtis Liquors, La Vita Tile and Cohasset Consignment Shop. "We are pleased to have Par-Tee as a new tenant in our Cohasset center," says Tedeschi's Whalen. "Miniature golf is a growing family activity and we are confident Par-Tee will have a positive impact on the local community."

Tedeschi Realty Corporation's shopping center portfolio is comprised of 27 prominent community shopping centers located throughout Southeastern Massachusetts and Rhode Island. The centers consist of more than 2.2 million square feet of space and more than 200 retail tenants. Many of Tedeschi's shopping centers are anchored by major regional supermarkets, including Star Market, Super Stop & Shop, Victory and Foodmaster. In addition to its property management and leasing divisions, Tedeschi Realty Corporation's construction division is one of Southeastern Massachusetts' leading general contractors with extensive experience in retail and commercial construction. Tedeschi Realty has approximately 45 employees in its Rockland headquarters.

Take a Walk on the Wild Side

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Green thumbs up

Happiness is spending a glorious spring day in early May working in the garden from dawn to dusk. Serenaded by the cheery, melodic song of a perky little house wren, I pause occasionally to watch as it methodically gathers materials to build its nest in the tiny birdhouse hanging from a limb above the garden. Nearby, a pair of bluebirds are similarly engaged. As the handsome male perches on the roof of its nesting box, its brilliant blue feathers glow in the sun, creating an indelible image of one of nature's most beautiful creations. Overhead, a male Baltimore Oriole whistles and chatters its distinctive tune, calling to its mate and hopping about in the treetops, its unmistakable orange and black plumage readily discerned from below. The oriole's spring arrival in my garden usually coincides with the blooming of the equally vibrant blooms of my Japanese quince, which it frequently visits to sip the nectar of the fiery, orange-red blossoms.

As I carefully dislodge a fallen branch from among the fleshy stalks of a clump of Virginia Bluebells, I am reminded of the tranquil woodlands of my childhood home in the Catskill Mountains. In recent years, when I wish to recapture these fond memories of my carefree youth, I journey to the Garden in the Woods in Framingham to wander the peaceful trails of the New England Wildflower Society's botanical garden. Lovely in all seasons, May is perhaps the prettiest time of all to plan a visit to this 45-acre paradise and roam the rambling trails along woodland streams lined with delicate mosses and aristocratic ferns and forest floors carpeted with exquisite lady's slippers. In addition to the serene woodland setting, there is a lily pond, a sunny bog, pine barrens, rock gardens, a meadow and a Western garden. The flora of temperate North America are featured in extensive gardens and naturalistic plantings nestled in among rolling hills, babbling brooks and peaceful ponds. Many rare and endangered species are grown, studied and preserved.

A stroll through these enchanting woodland groves in May reveals huge clumps of the intensely-colored, nodding blooms of the Virginia Bluebell (Mertensia) accompanied by sunny yellow Celandine poppies, delicately-tinted, shell-pink azaleas and several species of red and white trillium. Colonies of May Apples display their large, mottled, umbrella-like leaves atop 12- to 18-inch stems with a solitary, waxy white flower which will eventually produce an edible, lemon-like fruit. The fleeting, snow-white blossoms of bloodroots, cradled by pale green, lobed leaves, appear here and there, intermingling with epimediums, whose airy sprays of cherry-red blooms dance upon wiry, arched stems amid broad carpets of handsome foliage.

A personal favorite is a little gem known as Dutchman's Breeches (Dicentra cucullaria). As described in the "Peterson Guide to Wildflowers," this charming member of the bleeding heart family displays "a delicate spray of waxy, yellow-tipped flowers drooping in a row from an arched stem. Each flower has two inflated spurs that suggest the legs of tiny pantaloons, ankles up." Finely-divided, blue-green foliage serves as a backdrop for these delightful flowers which have become a recent addition to my shady border. Equally enchanting are the unique flower of the pink lady's slipper, familiar to every gardener, with its pouch-like bloom atop a rigid stem rising from two large, oval, basal leaves.

A path leads from the woodland garden past a picturesque pond surrounded by moisture-loving plants. Innumerable clumps of irresistible, wooly fiddleheads will gradually unfurl to produce the broad, dramatic, stately fronds of the interrupted fern as the season progresses. Cheerful, brightly-colored marsh marigolds, often known as cowslips, dot the edge of the wet areas with mounds of shiny green, heart-shaped leaves and showy yellow blooms resembling buttercups.

Many of these woodland wildflowers can be grown successfully in our shady backyard gardens if given the proper soil conditions. A fluffy, woodsy soil, mildly acid, with a high humus content, will suit many of these woodland treasures. Ideal shade garden soil should be two parts humus (compost, peat, or leaf mold), one part sand, and one part loam. Filtered sunlight through deciduous trees or early morning sun followed by afternoon shade tends to be ideal for many shade-loving plants to encourage flowering. Supplemental moisture may be required, particularly during periods of drought, to ensure the survival of plants which prefer damp conditions. Be sure to visit Garden in the Woods, 180 Hemenway Road, Framingham, to partake of its magnificent floral display, educational courses, workshops and programs, gift shop and field trips. A spectacular plant sale of nursery-propagated wildflowers, garden perennials and shrubs is scheduled for June 10.

May and June are the time for garden club plant sales so be on the lookout for these terrific opportunities to acquire healthy plants and some great bargains from local gardens. The Rockland Country Gardeners will hold their sale Saturday, May 13. Join the Walnut Hill Garden Club of Hanover for "An Evening with Jim Zoppo" (host of WRKO's Saturday morning gardening show) Thursday, May 11, at 7:30 p.m. at the Congregational Church Hall in Hanover Center. Tickets are available at the door for $5.

I Dreamed of Africa (B)

No one has told Liam Aiken that you're not supposed to play with snakes.

Often it is the beauty of a film - its lush scenery, romantic sunsets and aerial views - that somehow undermines its story. Something of the sort occurs in this telling of the experiences of a divorcee, Kuki, who, barely escaping with her life after an auto accident, gradually comes to love another of the survivors, Paolo Gallmann, and with him moves to Africa, whence he has come in his youth and to which she has always dreamed of going. They take her young son, Emanuele, with them, easily convincing the 7-year-old that he'll have adventures enough to compensate for the loss of his comfortable life in Venice. They are Italians, at least Kuki is, but as performed by Kim Basinger and Vincent Perez, one hardly knows where they come from, her vocalizings clearly American, his vaguely continental. Over the objections of Kuki's mother (Eva Marie Saint), who appears to be an influential something or other and is certainly a grande dame, they go, finding a ramshackle ranch awaiting them, and begin the process of turning it into an operational farm.

Paolo has a wild streak and, with his new mates, goes off for long stretches of adventuresome hunting and exploring, leaving Kuki alone in Kenya to confront the animals that come into her sphere - snakes, beloved of her son, a lion, a roaming elephant - and poachers who kill the elephants and rhinos for their tusks and horns. The burden of making the ranch work and of learning to contend with the help is hers. The help all seem eager to be of assistance but there's naturally some degree of misunderstanding as she only gradually grows comfortable in Swahili and her employees in English. And with her young son (Liam Aiken) understandably eager to experience everything that this new world has to offer, Kuki, without her frequently absent husband, is sometimes at wit's end. Things are not perfect in this new Eden.

Tragedy strikes, and life moves on. The boy, now 17 (Garrett Strommen), studies at a private school in Nairobi but returns to the farm for vacations and helps his mother with her work and with raising his new baby sister. And tragedy strikes again. The most poignant moments in "I Dreamed of Africa" are those in which the follies of mankind and the uncertainties of nature take their toll on those she loves, and if the music, by Maurice Jarre, is at times a bit too manipulative, those scenes work well. Basinger is a limited actress with only a few well-practiced expressions, but one of those is the look of loss and bereavement. The Gallmanns are beautiful people, healthy and robust, and their story, especially Kuki's, who became and remains a conservationist and naturalist, is worth the telling. Bernard Lutic, the director of photography, is to be commended for the look of the film which, despite its episodic nature and its failure on some occasions to draw events into a coherent whole, is never a chore to watch. This is not "Out of Africa," but it is valuable just the same.

Up at the Villa (B-)

When did you last hear, in a movie intended not as a put-on of British upper-crust pomposity, a character in full huff and puff mode utter the expression "By Jove!"? Well, heaven's to Betsy, by cracky, there's one such character, and one such utterance in "Up at the Villa." This is a fitfully interesting, always scenic film incarnation of a lesser novella by W. Somerset Maugham, set where "Tea with Mussolini" was set, among the wealthy Anglo-American expatriate community in pre-World War II Italy. There is something, evidently, about the depression-inducing climate of Britain that over the ages has sent many of its distinguished denizens to warmer, sunnier, less scrupulously observing places, where, as in Italy, they can form a community upholding the particular crotchets of the mother country without having fully to contend with the consequences of their actions.

This movie is about not having fully to contend with the consequences of actions, specially those of and those surrounding a now nearly destitute widow, Mary Panton (Kristen Scott Thomas), who is residing at some leisure in an exquisitely situated Florence villa obviously lent to her by friends who are absent. Mary has just been offered marriage by a successful bureaucrat, Sir Edgar Swift (James Fox), who has been named governor of Bengal and who, though knowing that the age gap is significant, nonetheless hopes that Mary will find him worthy of her hand. As a snotty crone says to an observer at one of the many parties the movie offers us, Sir Edgar may be elderly but he's very rich, and becoming Lady Swift isn't such a bad compensation for a loveless marriage.

But while Sir Edgar is away in Rome doing whatever English baronets do in Rome in 1938, Mary meets a raffish American, Rowley Flint (Sean Penn), who is married but known for his dalliances with available ladies of all stripes. He falls madly for Mary and tries to convince her that a loveless marriage, such as his own, is not much better than a marriage of drunkenness and brutality, such as the one death has spared Mary from. Mary, Mary, quite contrary, rejects Rowley, but instead picks up a sadsack young violinist of no talent (Jeremy Davies), who turns out to be an Austrian refugee escaping the anchluss, and takes him home with her for one night of passion, something that Mary's friend, Princess San Ferdinando (Anne Bancroft, in full ghastly overacting mode), has spoken of with great warmth. Unfortunately Davies' attempt at English with an Austrian accent makes him utterly incomprehensible, but he's a romantic nutcase and his later actions propel the movie into its dangerous imbroglio. That, and the attentions of a leering fascist bureaucrat (Massimo Ghini), keep Mary quite busy. As it will keep you, in and around excursions to the beauties of Tuscany. Politics, lust, yearning, love, money, a gay hanger-on (Derek Jacobi), death, deceit: a potent brew in a pretty film lacking verve yet replete with languor.

Inexpensive tour of Italy is good bet

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

Q. I'd like to take my teen-age grandchild on a trip to Italy this summer. I'd prefer a package that includes airfare from the United States, and includes as much as possible ie: meals, sightseeing, transfers, etc.

A. If you're looking for a less-expensive tour, Go Ahead Vacations is a good bet. They offer a 10-night tour of Venice, Rome and Florence from $1,549 per person double-occupancy. The tour includes transfers, transportation within Italy, round-trip airfare, hotel, sightseeing, some museum admissions, daily breakfast and three dinners.

For more information, visit online at www.goaheadvacations.com or call (800) 242-4686.

If you'd like something more luxurious that includes more meals and better hotels (at a significantly higher price), try Perillo Tours at www.perillotours.com, or call (800) 431-1515, or your travel agent.

Q. Our family of four (two adults, two teen-age boys) would like to spend July 4 in New York City. Can you recommend a good hotel for us where we could all be in the same room? We'd like to stay in Midtown Manhattan.

A. The RIGHA Royal Hotel in Manhattan is offering $199 per-night rates for all major holidays this summer, including Memorial Day, July 4 and Labor Day (normal rate is $475 per night). There's a two-night minimum.

For this price, you get a luxurious suite with many amenities in a high-rise hotel steps from Broadway. Some suites have a pull-out queen-size sofa bed in the sitting room. There's an extra charge of $29 per night (not per person) for this type of room, but since it works out to $57 per person per night, it's a great deal.

For reservations and further details, call your travel agent or the hotel directly at (800) 937-5454, or (212) 307-5000, and ask for the Summer in the City rate.

Q. You recently recommended Access America as a good travel insurance agency. We bought insurance from them, via our travel agent, for a Danube River cruise last spring.

Due to flooding, the cruise could not operate (the cruise boat couldn't navigate under bridges). Access America refused to refund the cost of our canceled trip until we wrote to The New York Times travel section.

We finally received a check nine months after the fact. I feel as if they paid up only because they feared adverse publicity.

A Thanks for sharing your experience. As I wrote in a recent column, some travel insurance policies are full of loopholes and exclusions, including "acts of God" (such as flooding or earthquake), strikes, and terrorism, so it's important to shop around and read the fine print.

I'd be interested if other readers have found similar problems with Access America or other travel insurance companies.

Q. I'd like to rent a camper or motor home to explore New Zealand or Australia this summer. Where should I look?

A. Discover Wholesale Travel, (800) 576-7770, offers packages until Aug. 31, including airfare from Los Angeles, and 10 days motor home rental for a bit under $900 per person in New Zealand. It's about $100 more in Australia (you fly into Sydney).

Prices are based on double occupancy. Collision insurance is about $10 a day extra. Considering that airfare alone could cost this much, it's a good deal.

Have a travel question? George can be reached via e-mail at georgehobica(at)aol.com, or by writing to this newspaper.

Liquor license vote delayed

Neighbors want no alcohol at Lilac House

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The Red Lion Inn's expanded liquor license is likely to be complicated.

If the selectmen's decision follows their current line of thinking then all the separate areas of the facility that would allow alcohol could have a different set of rules.

The inn is also applying for an entertainment license that selectmen are also considering conditions for.

After nearly two hours of testimony and discussion at the continuation of the hearing Tuesday, selectmen took the matter under advisement with a promise to vote at their next meeting Tuesday, May 23.

The inn's owner Gerde Ordelheide is seeking an expanded liquor license so that — in addition to the bar and restaurant — alcohol would be permitted:

on the porches outside the current bar and restaurant;

on the patio outside the Red Lion Inn;

at the jazz club in the inn's basement;

at the two function halls — one in the proposed barn and the other in the upstairs of the former Lilac House;

at a wine bar that would be located either on the first floor of the Lilac House or at the barn; at the bar by the pool.

Ordelheide needs an entertainment license because the jazz club and function halls will have music.

No agreement on septic standards

By Dan Gravel
STAFF WRITER

The meeting between the Cohasset water commission and a developer of Arrowood Estates took on an air of strained congeniality last week as the two sides could not come to an agreement on what standards developers should meet in construction of the neighborhood.

Arrowood, in Scituate, is a 17-home subdivision, encompassing 70 acres on the Cohasset border near the reservoir.

Discussion centered on a letter that was sent to Arrowood developers by the town's environmental consultant in the matter, Norfolk Environmental. It highlighted concerns of water commissioners in regards to storm water runoff and the close proximity of septic systems to the Lily Pond watershed, which they believe could adversely affect the town's water supply.

"It's extremely upsetting to get a letter of this content at this point in time," said developer Steve Bjorkland. "We have gone to great lengths to protect the town's water supply."

Bjorkland, as well as Mark and Walter Winchester-the two other developers-agreed to move forward with plans to install a distilling basin for erosion protection and sediment control, which for the most part pleased the commission.

"Our credibility means a lot to us and we want the people of Cohasset to know we're doing the right thing."
— Mark Winchester, Arrowood developer

"We want to assure you that runoff will not go towards the reservoir," said Bjorkland. "The Winchesters do not want to go in and ruin the water supply."

They also said that no herbicides or pesticides will be used on site to prevent harming the water.

The water commission was less receptive to what they heard from Bjorkland about the septic systems,

Hope dwindles for plan to relocate lobster shop

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Tommy Alioto's plan of relocating the Cohasset Lobster Pound to the town-owned Hagerty property could suffer its final blow.

Hagerty committee chairman Russ Bonetti said it was unlikely the plan would get a single vote at the meeting scheduled last night after the Mariner went to press.

"I don't see it having much of a chance at all," Bonetti said Tuesday. "I feel bad for the guy at the lobster pound, but it's not the town's place to bail out a commercial enterprise."

Alioto and his business partner Don DiNatlae, who have run the lobster pound at 82 Border St. near the Mill River Marine Railway for five years, are being forced to look for another location because their current one has been sold to Peter Roy.

"We provide a convenient service," Alioto said. "When you get up at 4 a.m. and may finish at 8 p.m., the last thing you want to do is get in a truck and see where you can sell your lobsters."

Roy of Margin Street bought the site a few months ago and has told the men they will have to relocate. Roy's plans for the area have not been made public; he bought the Mill River Marine site that includes the lobster pound in February for $710,000.

So the Hagerty property that the town purchased about seven years ago seemed like the perfect solution. The cement slab, where the cutting room of the former Cohasset Colonials furniture kit manufacturing company at the site once stood, is still there. That's where the new lobster pound could be constructed, Alioto said.

"It looks ugly and we could put a building there that fits the area," he said.

The lobster pound is willing to pay the town $1,500 a month in rent. The business reports sales of $3 million a year. Cohasset Harbor lands 350,000 pounds of

MBTA holds open house on train

Noel Ripley, chairman of the Cohasset Historical Commission, reviews Greenbush plans with Pam Wolfe of Sverdrup, consultants to the MBTA on the train project.

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

It wasn't anything like train meetings in the past where dozens of residents on both sides of the tracks dug their heels in for a fight.

Tuesday's Greenbush open house sponsored by the Army Corps of Engineers and MBTA at town hall was more like an informational powwow where interested parties hovered over maps and diagrams to discuss the finer points of the train.

Kevin Dasey, MBTA senior project coordinator, said those he spoke with were upfront about where they stand on the train and he wouldn't have it any other way.

"The residents are very informed and are asking very good questions," he said. "They're being very upfront about whether they support the train or not but we're getting past that."

The purpose of the open house was for residents to be able to give their comments directly to the Army Corps, the lead federal agency over the Greenbush restoration project. The corps and the MBTA are conducting similar meetings in the five towns along the Greenbush corridor to gather information about historic resources along the proposed train line, project effects and mitigation for historic resources.

Lightkeepers Memorial unveiling is Sunday

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Herb Jason, 86, has put in an order for a fine day Sunday. That's because his long-time dream will be realized. Ever since the local lobsterman was a boy he heard stories about the two young men who perished at the first Minot's Ledge Light that toppled during a gale in April, 1851. Jason with the help of his brother, Ken, and grandson, John Small, will unveil a memorial to the two 20-year-old lightkeepers — Joseph Antoine and Joseph Wilson — during a special ceremony on Government Island on Sunday.

"Nothing like this has taken place since the first cornerstone of the second Minot's Ledge tower was laid in 1858."
— Wigmore Pierson, memorial committee

The unveiling will be the culmination of a lobbying and fund-raising effort over four years to see the project through to fruition.

Wigmore Pierson, general chairman of the memorial committee, said all citizens are invited to the event.

"Nothing like this has taken place since the first cornerstone of the second Minot's Ledge tower was laid in 1858," he said. "At that event US Sen. Edward Everett spoke. He also spoke before President Lincoln at the dedication of Gettysburg cemetery."

Officials from the town, committee and the US Coast Guard led by Chief Warrant Officer David Waldrip gathered at Government Island Monday afternoon for a walk through of the event.

The program gets underway at 1 p.m. with a musical prelude by the Forte Brass Quartet. At about 2 p.m. after the official party arrives including Jason, state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray and state Sen. Robert Hedlund. Lily Sestito will sing the National Anthem followed by the invocation by the Rev. Gary Ritts and prologue by Pierson.

Douglas Bingham of the American Lighthouse Foundation will deliver the principal address at 2:15.

ConCom associate

The conservation commission still needs an associate member. Interested citizens should call the selectmen's office at 383-4105.

Visitor spaces

Two visitor parking spaces for out-of-towners that do not require beach stickers have been delineated on Government Island near the sailing club, selectmen announced this week.

15-minute parking

Selectmen approved a 15-minute parking restriction from 6-11 p.m. for three parking spaces directly in front of Tedeschi's in the village. Parking in the village is currently limited to an hour.

Town parking lot

The town parking lot is being re-striped at a cost of $870 and the area where the old DPW barn was, is being "hot topped." The improvements will add 15 spaces for a total of 113, Town Manager Mark Haddad said.

Filming on common

Red Tree Productions is currently shooting a commercial for Hood Ice Cream on the town common and that's what the tent and art displays are for, Town Manager Mark Haddad said. The company is donating $1,500 to the Cohasset Common Gift Account for the privilege.

Appraiser needed

Selectman Fred Koed who is a liaison to the Greenbush mitigation committee said the town should consider hiring an appraiser to determine the value of the train right-of-way that the town owns.

"It's something to think about," Koed said.

Beach, RTF permits

Your beach and RTF permits are expiring. You will need vehicle registrations, or if not, a Massachusetts registration, proof of residency (tax bill or rental lease). You are encouraged to purchase your sticker through the mail by providing a copy of your registration and a self-addressed return envelope.

Stickers will be on sale at the town hall starting Monday, May 15, and will have the following schedule. Feral cats: control and disposition

To reduce the risk of exposure to zoonitic diseases carried by cats such as rabies, cat scratch disease, toxoplasmosi etc. and reduce potential property damage, the control of feral cats is imperative. In an effort to control these nuisances the Cohasset Board of Health establishes this regulation.

1. Upon the written complaint of three or more citizens, the Board of Health in conjunction with the town's Animal Control Officer (ACO) shall perform an investigation to determine the validity of the complaint. If the complaint is considered valid, the board shall request the ACO to trap the offending cats.
2. When the ACO suspects that there is a feral cat problem, he may, with the concurrence of the health agent, initiate a trapping program without a complaint from residents.
3. If a cat which is privately owned is trapped and the owner cannot be immediately identified and returned, the owner, upon claiming the animal must pay for the cost of its apprehension, feeding and care in accordance with a fee schedule developed by the ACO.

For a copy of the complete regulation contact the Cohasset Board of Health office at 383-4116.

Time for walk-ins

State school funds

Senator Hedlund reports that the budget proposal, which will be part of the Senate budget recommendation for fiscal year 2001 to be released late this week, maintains a level of funding established in the Education Reform Act with a $225 million increase in direct state aid to local schools. This proposal would allocate $1,327,934 to Cohasset next year, a $220,325 increase above the current year and a $31,475 above the Governor's proposal.

"The expenditure of these funds will make a meaningful improvement in our schools," said Hedlund. He emphasized that "our state support is well complemented by the local decision-making process. We know that the schools need adequate resources, and we know that those closest to the schools are in the best position to prioritize. This is a partnership focused on the best interest of students."

The Senate budget will be released this week by the senate Committee on Ways and Means be before the Senate next week. After the Senate passes its version of the budget, the House and Senate are reconciled to submit a single legislative proposal to the Governor. Hedlund expressed his hope that "as the budget is finalized the Senate's emphasis on education — both resources and responsibility — will be preserved."

Hingham selectmen, MBTA ink train tunnel pact

By Carol Britton Meyer
STAFF WRITER

Following months of tough negotiations, Hingham and the MBTA have finally signed a Greenbush mitigation agreement.

After deciding last week that the time was right to sign the agreement with the MBTA to drop the town's lawsuit against the transit authority in exchange for a short tunnel under Hingham Square, the selectmen stopped short of placing their signatures on the document.

Following yet another public meeting on the subject Friday, however, Hingham selectmen announced the final details had come together, resulting in an agreement all three board members voted to sign.

State secretary of transportation and MBTA chairman Kevin Sullivan added his signature to the document Monday, finalizing the "deal."

"We're very encouraged that Hingham selectmen have taken the step and started to work in good faith with us," said Jon Carlisle, spokesman for Sullivan. "This is a win-win situation for both sides. It's a good compromise, and the Hingham selectmen are to be commended."

According to Hingham selectman Martin Crane, the lawsuit will be discontinued in federal court this week.

The original agreement was reached in executive session Monday, May 8, and approved by all three selectmen shortly thereafter at a public hearing. But the board announced the next day that the agreement was "oh hold" until Friday due to what the town's Greenbush coordinator Alexander Macmillan called a "glitch" in the process.

Ultimately, some language changes were incorporated into the 16-page document last week, which required the selectmen to re-vote the issue on Friday.

According to Macmillan, language was added to the original agreement at the request of the executive office of transportation and construction to ensure that the secretary of transportation was not committing himself to move forward with Greenbush if the cost exceeds the $408 million currently budgeted for the project.

Initially, the department of transportation set a $400 million cap. But according to Carlisle, that figure was "not a scientifically arrived upon" number.

"The $408 million is a firm limit — the estimated high end for the project with the tunnel," he said.

By the same token, the Town of Hingham wanted assurances included in the document stating that the tunnel must be built if the Greenbush project goes through. In other words, the cost of the project can't be used as an "excuse" not to build a tunnel.

"If the MBTA runs out of money and can't do the project, many people won't shed a tear," Macmillan said, "but the T has no ability to go forward with the project without including the mitigation (contained) in the agreement, (which includes a tunnel)."

Although many residents publicly oppose the train, there are some who are in favor of Greenbush restoration.

Ross Hall of High Street thinks the town is coming away from the negotiating table with "far more" than he expected.

"The selectmen have put a substantial amount of effort into (the process)," he said.

Greenbush opponent Charles Chittick shares Hall's view at least on that point.

"This memorandum of understanding is a remarkable achievement," he said. "I see it as an insurance policy enforceable by law."

Still, he believes Greenbush is a long way from becoming a reality.

"Continue to fight restoration," Chittick told the audience. "Your efforts could make the agreement moot."

Legal counsel

Reconsideration of the wording in the agreement was due to the fact that legal counsel on both sides didn't have a chance to look over the document prior to the selectmen deciding to sign it.

Signing the agreement at this time ensures the terms contained within will become part of the Army Corps of Engineers historical review process currently underway, thus guaranteeing the agreement's enforceability. That issue was one of the main reasons why talks between the MBTA and the town broke down in the past.

"It's critical to have a signed agreement in hand — one the MBTA is bound to stick to," Macmillan said.

Coming to an agreement at this time also means Hingham won't have to take a chance on possibly "losing out" at a later date — in particular at the upcoming May 15 Corps hearing, when Hingham mitigation issues will be on the table.

According to selectmen and Macmillan, the Corps indicated in two draft documents that it concurs with the MBTA's preferred alternative of commuter rail as the most viable transportation alternative, although the Corps has not announced its final decision.

"It's not the Corps' job to determine if the project is a good investment," Macmillan noted. "We've made alternative arguments for years. It seems like we're going to rail whether we like it or not."

Also, a magistrate's ruling last year in favor of the MBTA with regard to the lawsuit was considered a major setback for the town — a ruling likely to be upheld by the judge who would have eventually rendered his own decision on the issue.

Still, some residents question the timing of the agreement. They think the town should wait until after July 1, when the transit authority will be required to account for what it spends.

Hingham selectman Mathew MacIver, on the other hand, thinks there's no time like the present to move on an agreement.

"We would rather bargain from a position of strength with a strong agreement," he said. "We don't have any bullets left in our gun."

One of the strongest measures provided for in the agreement is a commitment made by the MBTA to cooperate with Hingham to develop a construction mitigation plan which minimizes adverse affects in residential areas and preserves the economic viability of Hingham Square.

"The bottom line from a transportation standpoint is we want to restore Greenbush — but we don't want to be bad neighbors when we do so," Carlisle said.

According to Crane, constructing a tunnel under the Square is expected to take about one construction season (spring to fall).

Preservation fund

The agreement provides for a $1.35 million preservation trust fund — to be paid to the town over three years and administered under the guidance of the historical commission — for the purpose of preserving historic properties, streetscapes and landscapes located along or near the railroad right-of-way.

The fund would help alleviate some of the negative effects of the train.

Nevertheless, some residents are determined to keep up the fight.

Gordon Hersey, owner of "The Scoop" ice cream shop at Station Street is sure there must be a better way to provide transportation alternatives to the South Shore.

"It took 40 years to build downtown Hingham back up (after train service was discontinued in the 1950s)," he told selectmen last week. "I've seen the train ruin the town before. Hingham was a wreck, with pigeons flying through the (broken) windows in (empty) buildings."

While some residents think the issue should be placed in referendum form before the town, MacIver fears the town "will miss an opportunity if we move to a direct democratic solution."

"I'm very much for open meetings and direct democracy," he stated. "But because the situation is out of control, we need to break the stalemate, move forward and look towards the next part of the saga. There will be plenty of opportunities to protect our interests and raise questions."

Some residents were startled to discover the trains would have double-decker cars. One young resident who lives along the tracks had tears in her eyes when she heard the details of the agreement when it was first announced.

While no one can predict with certainty the future of Greenbush, Crane said the agreement addresses and mitigates the impacts of a project that would at grade, "destroy the quality of life more than anything else in the past 300 years in Hingham. This agreement doesn't guarantee the project will be built and it doesn't make us advocates for the concept, but we're unwilling to take undue risks."

If Greenbush restoration gets the final "okay," trains could start running on the South Shore by late 2005, if all goes as planned.

Mitigation details on the table

Committee, said there were a lot of good questions and not just on historic impacts.

"For many, it's the first time they'd seen the layout of the track," he said.

A color-coded map on one wall showed which homes would receive mitigation because they were part of a National Register Historic District or in a district that is eligible for listing on the National Register. Historic properties can receive mitigation for more than noise and vibration. Mitigation could include the home's setting and how the visual impact of the train affects the property, explained Robert Frascella of Sverdrup, consultants to the MBTA on the project. Steel picket fences in high visibility areas such as near the South Shore Art Center will be used as opposed to the typical, standard chain link. If an historic home abuts the tracks it could get black, chain link fencing that would be less visible, he said.

Bob Thomas of Joy Place said he came to the open house to get information on the project.

"I'm interested in where the train goes exactly and in learning as much as I can about it," he said.

Thomas said he would take the train to work when he could but the train's destination at South Station is not always convenient.

STAFF PHOTO: SUSAN ANNE

Mohammed El Shrafi of Sverdrup talks to John Childs and Peter Guild, who is a member of the Cohasset Mitigation Committee, about restoration of the Greenbush line through Cohasset.

Thomas, who moved to town about a year ago, said he is generally an advocate of public transportation but hadn't been in town long enough to form an opinion on Greenbush.

Casey McCarthy, 103 S. Main St., said safety was a big concern.

"The number of grade crossings and the train's proximity to the village area is a concern," she said.

Dasey, the project coordinator, said getting good and bad feedback is helpful.

"We've gotten ideas from people who are opposed who have stepped up and said, 'Why are you doing it this way?'" he said. "I'd rather talk to opponents and listen to what they have to say. They might help us.

"Communication is the absolute key," he said.

Maps showing historic resources and proposed mitigation were laid out on tables for residents to peruse. Residents could submit written comments for the record. The open house was part of the Section 106 process. Section 106 of the National Historic Preservation Act is a law that protects archeological and historic sites when there is a major infrastructure project. That process is wrapping up, officials said.

AROUND TOWN

WELCOME TO THE WORLD!

Jeff and Maggie Moy of 33 Ledgewood Drive are proud parents of a baby girl, Emily Katherine, born March 28. She is joined by big brother, Benjamin, who is thrilled with her new sister and looks forward to a playmate at Sandy Beach. Grandparents are Paul and Gert Halas of Danbury, Conn. and Ning Moy of Quincy.

NEW ARRIVAL

Just want to take a minute to brag. I'm (editor Mary Ford) a new aunt (again!). My sister Holly Taylor Pfluger of Plymouth produced the most perfect baby boy at about 7:30 a.m. Saturday – just in time for Mother's Day. His name is Richard August Pfluger II and he weighed in at 8 lb. 4 oz. and measured 20-1/2 in. long. Tickled with his new baby brother is Edward, 2. The boys' proud dad is Rich Pfluger.

GRADUATION TIME!

Mary and James Rosano of Cohasset would like to announce the graduation of their youngest daughter Gina Rosano from Babson College! The whole family is very proud of Gina and wishes her the very best. Gina's nieces and nephews, John, Hope, Christopher and Rose, would like to send a special cheer for their aunt – "Way to go 'G.' We love you! We knew you could do it!"

COMMENCEMENT SPEAKER

It's commencement season and students across the country are putting on caps and gowns and heading down the aisle to the strains of "Pomp and Circumstance." At Cambridge College, however, commencement feels a little different. True, the audience will be full of graduates' proud parents — but they may be outnumbered by the same graduates even prouder children and grandchildren. Not surprising for a college where the average age of the student body is 40!

This year's commencement speaker, Blenda Wilson, Ph.D., will deliver a keynote address to more than 500 graduates on Sunday, May 28. She and her husband, Louis Fair, live in Cohasset.

Blenda will also be among the recipients of an honorary doctorate at the commencement exercises. Before she became president of the Nellie Mae Foundation, one of the nation's largest grant makers in the field of education, she served as president of California State University, Northridge, where her leadership in helping that institution recover from the devastating earthquake that hit Southern California in 1994 brought her national and international media attention.

PHONE-A-THON

If you are a parent and hear a friendly Cohasset voice over the phone next Wednesday evening, it just might be a PSO volunteer calling to request donations. All donations received during the phone-a-thon will be used as seed money for the 2000-2001 academic year. Last year donations were used to fund teacher grants for curriculum enrichment materials or programs; playground equipment and guest-speaker night. Please help support your school!

DRUG ABUSE TALK

The Konohassett Lodge, 7 Brook St., is sponsoring an open forum at 7:45 p.m., Friday, May 26 that will feature the Cohasset police drug abuse officer. The event is open to the public. The lodge also supports

Being educated about cancer at the Smart Shop

Relay For Life is June 9-10

By Kathleen Zigmont
CORRESPONDENT

If you stop in at the The Cancer Smart Shop booth at the American Cancer Society's Relay for Life next month, you can walk away knowing where you may have skin damage, how to do self-exams, and how to find an area smoking cessation group.

According to Susan Rodgers-Tibbetts, director of cancer control for the American Cancer Society, the Cancer Smart Shop has always been part of the Relay for Life, but over the past few years, has become more important.

"So many people in the community are contributing to the fight against cancer so we want to let the community know what we can do for them," she said.

Rodgers-Tibbetts said the booth, which is manned by volunteers, has information on ACS programs and services for Relay participants, family members, friends and anyone attending the Relay. The sixth annual Relay for Life, scheduled for June 9 and 10, will take place at Cohasset High School. The Cancer Smart Shop will be open June 10 from 9 a.m. to noon.

"So many people in the community are contributing to the fight against cancer so we want to let the community know what we can do for them."

— Susan Rodgers-Tibbetts, American Cancer Society

Rodgers-Tibbetts said information on some ACS programs, such as Road to Recovery, Reach to Recovery and Look Good, Feel Better will be available, as well as information for low or no-cost breast and cervical cancer screenings for under-insured area residents. In addition, a skin analyzer — a machine that uses an ultraviolet light to locate skin damage — will be available, for free, for those curious about what the sun has done to their skin.

"It's not at all a diagnostic tool, but it gets attention. It gets people thinking about using sunscreen and covering up in the sun," she said.

For Karen Burns, who is running this year's Cancer Smart Shop at the Cohasset Relay for Life, the cause is personal. Burns, 52, suffered from cancer of the larynx six years ago and lost her voice box. Since then, she has been volunteering for the ACS and has not missed a Relay.

"It's been instrumental to my recovery. Everyone is so supportive and it is more of a celebration for cancer survivors," she said.

Burns said one very important part of the Cancer Smart Shop is the advocacy program, where volunteers are educated about issues and bills that will be coming before lawmakers.

"We're asking people to learn a little bit about cancer related issues, such as tobacco laws, research funding, and call or write their lawmakers about it. It takes very little time but is very important," said Burns.

Burns said stopping into the Cancer Smart Shop could save lives.

"The survival rates for cancer are changing and that's because education and screenings are making a difference. That's what the day is all about," she said.

For more information on the Relay for Life or any ACS programs, call 508-584-9600.

Pilgrim Cooperative Bank of Cohasset is sponsoring the Cancer Smart Shop and the Cancer Survivors' Reception. Other sponsors for the Relay For Life include the Red Parrot Restaurant, the Red Lion Inn, Atlantica and The Rotary Club of Cohasset.

The Cohasset Mariner is proud to be the media sponsor for the American Cancer Society's fourth annual Cohasset Relay For Life.

Lightkeepers Memorial unveiling is Sunday

The memorial will be unveiled at about 2:45, followed by the flag being raised by one Girl Scout and one Boy Scout. Then the bell on the Replica will be tolled three times in tribute to Antoine and Wilson and once more for all other keepers who gave their lives in service to the country. Three wreaths will be laid on the harbor followed by the benediction offered by the Rev. John Mulvehill. Then all will sing "God Bless America."

OPINION

EDITORIAL

The MCAS is here to stay

The "train wreck" has become the insiders' shorthand term for what will happen in 2003, when high school diplomas will be handed only to students who have passed the math and English MCAS tests. Educators also use less-than-glowing language in discussing the test at the heart of the state's standards and accountability program. CommonWealth Magazine this month quotes a Marlborough administrator's view: "Living through MCAS is hell."

If so, educators should keep dressing for warm weather. Despite student boycotts and loud complaints from some adults, it appears the MCAS is here to stay.

At a recent forum in Boston, the leaders of the state's political and education policy establishment showed a remarkable unanimity. Gov. Paul Cellucci, Senate President Tom Birmingham, House Speaker Tom Finneran and state Board of Education Chairman James Peyser offered minor variations on the theme of staying the course.

The state's business establishment, more convinced than ever that an educated workforce is critical to the economy, also remains committed to the standards movement. The commentariat agrees: The Globe, the Herald, even the Phoenix have all voiced editorial support for the MCAS, as has the MetroWest Daily News, which is part of Community Newspaper parent company of the Cohasset Mariner.

More important, the public appears to agree. Mass Insight reports its poll found people support high-stakes testing by a 2-1 margin. Support is particularly strong in the minority community, where the MCAS requirement threatens the most diplomas.

The consensus seems to come from several shared conclusions. The test itself, while far from perfect, is respected for its toughness and for its emphasis on reasoning and writing skills. The changes people see being made in their schools seem directly linked to the urgency generated by the high-stakes deadline. And a retreat in the face of high failure rates would amount to an acceptance of a devalued diploma.

"Stop blaming the test for revealing something we don't like," advised former Rep. Mark Roosevelt, one of the authors of Education Reform. Education leaders at the state and local level can build on this consensus from focusing the debate on what can be done for the thousands of students at risk of flunking the MCAS. Programs for intervention in the earlier grades and remediation for older students need to be strengthened, subsidized and, perhaps, mandated. Approaches that work need to be identified and tips shared with other school districts.

Gov. Cellucci said his administration is looking at creating post-high school programs at community colleges for seniors who have failed the MCAS. Who said every child should be educated in exactly 12 years?

The forum's keynote speaker, former Colorado Gov. Roy Romer, used to run a school for airplane pilots. He explained that when you're getting your pilot's license, what is fixed are the knowledge and proficiencies the student must attain. What is variable is how many hours of training it takes to achieve them.

In public education, the reverse has always been the case: What's fixed is how many days and how many years you must spend in school and what is variable — far too variable — is how much students learn before they are handed a diploma and sent into the world. Of all the entrenched ideas education reform must challenge, that may be the most important. If we want all students adequately educated, we must give each of them the time and attention he or she needs, not run them all down the same assembly line.

Gun control

TO THE EDITOR:

I would like to thank everyone who donated their time, support and money to the Million Mom March. The response from the community to our local group of marchers was overwhelming. In the days before the march, as members of the community stepped forward to speak with us about the issue of gun control, we heard your outrage and your concern about the safety and well being of all children.

It is in keeping with Cohasset tradition to respond to an issue that concerns the welfare of children, and this effort was no exception. We do not need our own tragedy in our own town to know that when a child is threatened injured, or dies as a result of gunfire, the spirit of children everywhere is threatened, perhaps damaged as well.

I hope the Million Mom March is the first step toward ending this tragic trend in our country. Thanks to all who have supported our participation in the march. We have added your strong voices to ours as we bring our message to Washington on Mothers Day.

For those who wish to make further contributions, they may be sent to: Stop Handgun Violence, One Bridge Street, Suite 3000, Newton, MA 02045.

Cohasset moms march for gun control

By Joan Stack Kovach
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

With a bouquet of lilacs in a paper vase taped to the window, with a cooler of refreshing drinks, a tray of cold sushi, with bottles of water, and bottles of sun block, with plates of homemade cookies of homemade muffins from fellow moms, with copies of fact sheets on gun violence in America, with the blue flashing lights of a Cohasset Police Department escort, they left town eight o'clock Saturday night.

Combining Cohasset elegance and the determination and commitment of mothers who know when something has to stop, they headed south for the Million Mom March on Washington to petition congress for sensible gun laws. There were 24 of them — including 17 who are mothers to 49 children, and a grandchild. They gave up the flowers and dinners of Mothers' Day, and spent a total of 22 hours on the crowded bus. They were mostly from Cohasset, but there was a mom from Scituate, one from Hingham, and one from Medford, too. In Washington, they met mothers from Maryland and Minnesota, from Washington State and Washington D.C., others like them, people whose every day, every waking hour includes the thought of the protection of their children, of all children. Connie Afshar, mother of four girls met her daughter Alia, a student at George Washington University. Kitty Whitley traveled to D.C. earlier in the week and joined her daughter and granddaughter. They all went to D.C. to stand with 750,000 others on the National Mall in Washington on Sunday and say out loud: "enough is enough".

They joined mothers from Columbine, from Dunblane Scotland, from the inner cities and the outer suburbs who had lost children to gun violence. They listened to Kerry Kennedy and Melissa Manchester , all mothers, all fed up. Along with so many others, the group from the south shore spent their mothers day standing in the sun, listening to speakers tell of their losses, their resolve, being reminded by Rosie O'Donnell that there are more mothers than NRA members. The powerful messages of Rep. Carolyn McCarthy, Susan Sarandon, and others stayed with them on the long ride home.

They marched behind their big yellow banner that read, "Massachusetts Moms know. It's easier to childproof your gun than bulletproof your child." And they returned to Cohasset early Monday morning, resolved to continue working to establish sensible gun control laws in this country.

There were 24 of them — including 17 who are mothers to 49 children, and a grandchild. They gave up the flowers and dinners of Mothers' Day, and spent a total of 22 hours on the crowded bus.

Older and wiser than they were when the Vietnam War had them marching in 1970, children then but now they have children and grandchildren of their own.

"It was in some ways like the protests against the Vietnam War. It's a protest against senseless killing and wasted young lives," said Jane Kyricos, a mother of two who made the trip.

Many related to the words of writer Anna Quindlen, mother of three, who said, "I am one of you." She described the job of a mother protecting her children, like getting them; immunized, feeding them vegetables, and buckling them in car seats. She spoke of the tasks involved in being in this society, like waiting in line to register a car, or struggling to open a childproof bottle of decongestant. "Don't you dare tell me you can't register a gun..." "... or childproof a gun," she said with a powerful emphasis. Standing there they realized gun control is about families and about logic; is the same as putting a cork on a fish hook so no one is hurt by it. It just makes good sense, and mothers are sensible, above all.

The 12-hour ride home to Cohasset entailed a detour through New York's Times Square. The bus was now crowded with empty wrappers and water bottles, drooping lilacs, and exhausted female bodies draped in impossible positions in search of a few hours of sleep. No signs of elegance now except in the thoughts of the tired marchers. In white shoe polish on the windows of the bus, Tony the driver had written "1,000,000 MOMS" "D.C. or bust". Late night Manhattanites watched it ride by and raised their fists in support. Inside, Paula Buick, a mother of five sons from Cohasset, was using a plastic visor to write a note to teachers at Milton Academy, excusing 16-year-old march participant Meredith Bates from homework for the day, if not the week. There was talk of meeting in the near future to plan what the group would do next.

Amyra O'Connell who organized the trip observed, "It's a daunting challenge, but being there makes it seem, perhaps, we could really turn around the way people in this country feel about guns."

Move rocks from town right of way

Selectmen have made it official. Residents must move any rocks or other obstacles off town property.

The problem is that most people may not realize that the town owns part of what may be their front yard. Public streets such as North and South Main streets and Forest Avenue are about 20 feet wide, but the town easement extends another ten feet on either side, selectmen said.

What some residents are doing is placing rocks or other obstacles along the street to prevent parking or vehicles from driving on the grass, Selectman Merle Brown said.

He noted that across from the Little League Field, some residents put rocks out near the street.

"It's a serious situation if someone can't pull off the road (because of the obstacle)," selectman Ronnie McMorris said. It's now the policy of the board of selectmen that all obstacles be removed from within the town right-of-way.

LIBRARY CORNER

Artist of the Month

Patricia Gray, a member of the Copley Society of Boston, the South Shore Art Center and the North River Art Society, is the latest artist of the month on display at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. Gray's show began April 26 and continues until June 28. An opening reception took place Sunday, April 30.

Gray has worked in pastels and oils for more than 25 years. Her style draws from traditional and contemporary New England landscape. Her work ranges from the North River to cityscapes of Boston. In her artist statement, Gray points out that her approach is to, "juxtapose the images found in nature with those created by man, meshing together buildings, concrete and people to a modern version of the landscape venue."

Gray graduated with a Bachelor of Fine Arts from Mercyhurst College in Erie, Penn., and went on to study at the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts in Philadelphia and Massachusetts College of Art. She taught in several areas in New Jersey during the 1970s and is currently teaching at the North River Arts Society.

Gray has had numerous prize winning exhibitions and is displayed in several corporate collections, including both Fidelity Investments and Liberty Mutual Insurance Co. in Boston.

See for yourself. Visit the gallery at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library through June 28.

Crime scenes draw tourists

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

As far as I'm concerned, the most popular tourist attraction on the South Shore is not the Adams birthplaces in Quincy or the Old Oaken Bucket mill in Scituate or even Plymouth Rock itself. It's the railroad crossing in South Braintree where Sacco and Vanzetti shot the paymaster and his guard.

It seems like every time I have visitors from out of town, mostly from the Midwest, they demand that I show them the spot on Pearl Street, which is now hidden between two malls and underneath a bridge over the railroad tracks.

There's no marker to memorialize the day, April 15, 1920, when the Slater & Morrill shoe factory payroll was heisted, leading to one of the most famous and controversial trials of the century.

It's as if the local tourist industry would prefer that visitors forget about Sacco and Vanzetti and go around the corner and check out instead the Sylvanus Thayer house or French's Common, where Al Hollis invented twilight baseball.

Not so the tourist industry in towns that have marketable crimes in other parts of the country.

From the Borden house at 92 Second St. in Fall River, where Lizzie gave her mother 40 whacks and her father 41, to Alcatraz, the involuntary exile home of Al Capone in California, crime scenes are big business.

There's even a new book, "Crime Scene USA: A Traveler's Guide to the Locations of Famous and Infamous Murders, Robberies, Kidnappings, and Other Unlawful Acts," to show you exactly where you can see them on your vacation this summer.

From the Borden house at 92 Second St. in Fall River, where Lizzie gave her mother 40 whacks and her father 41, to Alcatraz, the involuntary exile home of Al Capone in California, crime scenes are big business.

If you're in Louisiana, be sure to look up the Bonnie and Clyde Museum in Gibland near the spot where a posse ambushed the bank-robbing pair at a road block and poured 187 shells into their car. The museum is opened to their admirers by appointment.

In the little town of Montpelier, Idaho, the place to be is 833 Washington St., the location of a bank that was robbed by Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid in 1896. If you time your visit right, the good folks will even reenact the robbery for you.

Folks around Deadwood, S. D., are mighty proud of the recreated saloon at 657 Main St. where Wild Bill Hickock was shot in the back by Jack McCall. They may even let you hold Wild Bill's last poker hand aces and eights, thereafter known as the "Dead Man's Hand."

You can still attend a play at Ford's Theater, 511 10th St. NW in Washington, but there's no reenactment of the actor John Wilkes Booth assassinating Abe Lincoln. You just have to imagine it.

For modern crime fans, there's the sixth floor of the Texas School Book Depository, 411 Elm St. in Dallas (now a museum) from which Lee Harvey Oswald shot JFK — and if you still don't believe he did it, there is always the Conspiracy Museum a few blocks away.

There's the Dakota, an apartment building at the corner of 72nd St. and Central Park West on New York's upper west side where the old Beatle John Lennon was gunned down by Mark David Chapman.

Unfortunately, the garage at 2122 North Clark St., Chicago, site of the St. Valentine's Day Massacre, has been torn down but 40 miles west, you can belly up to the bar at Al Capone's Speakeasy and Steak House at 337 Riverside Drive in St. Charles, Ill.

And read the sign in the men's room that explains, "Big Al hung out here."

ANIMAL CONTROL

PAUL MURPHY 383-9119

In response to the numerous calls I have received over the past weeks, I have asked The Mariner to reproduce this information on foxes. Please call me at 383-9119 with any sightings so I can track the movement of these animals around the town. This is part two, part one ran last week.

Problems

People may be surprised and sometimes frightened to discover that foxes live in their neighborhoods, but these fears are almost completely groundless. Foxes are not dangerous to humans in any sense, except when they are rabid (which is rare) or have been captured and are being handled. Even then, it takes a lot of handling for a fox to even defend itself by biting, and the natural tendency is for the animal to flee rather than fight. Red foxes will occasionally prey on small house cats or kittens, and certainly will take small animals such as rabbits and guinea pigs when they are left outside unprotected. Both red and gray foxes will eat grapes, raspberries, windfall persimmons, apples and other fruit, but garden vegetables are usually not bothered. In all, foxes do such little damage and engage in so few conflicts with people that we hesitate to characterize them as problem animals at all.

Solutions

TOLERANCE

Sometimes foxes are blamed for damage they did not cause. The trash can that was knocked over by the neighborhood dogs or a visiting raccoon may attract a fox who is observed and then blamed for their nuisance. Foxes may cut through yards when moving from one hunting area to another, and the homeowner often becomes concerned over what they are doing. In fact, they need not be bothered at all and, if left alone, will probably do the homeowner a service by performing free rodent control on their way by.

EXCLUSION

Outdoor pets such as rabbits and poultry should be protected by housing them in secure hutches or pens that are built to withstand any effort by foxes, raccoons or dogs to break in. Because all these animals will dig under fences, it is important to make sure that an 8-inch or greater L-shaped footer on this outer perimeter is buried at least a foot deep. Electric fences can also be effective in excluding all of the species that might be attracted to poultry or small animals, but these are best when used in conjunction with other permanent perimeter fencing. The electric fence could be single-strand and placed in front of a perimeter fence to enhance the effect of repelling as well as excluding any inquisitive predator.

REPELLENTS

No repellents are registered expressly for use in repelling foxes, although the many products sold to repel domestic dogs from yards and gardens will undoubtedly have a similar effect on a passing fox.

SCARE DEVICES

Because they are active mostly by night and are very cautious about people when out and about, foxes are rarely seen by suburbanites. Noise-making devices, ranging from transistor radios to the motion-sensitive alarms that are on the market can be quite effective in combining repelling and harassing strategies. The automatic sprinkler system can be an effective deterrent for lawns or gardens. Even a loud voice or the banging of a pan or dish can frighten these very sensitive animals and keep them out of an area where they are not wanted. Any sound or sight (that is the least threatening) will cause their retreat.

HARASSMENT

Foxes that have made dens under porches and decks are one of the most common problems homeowners experience with these animals. As with all such situations, we recommend tolerance until the young are old enough to follow the parents on nightly forays, then exclusion to keep them from reusing the den. In fact, the kits will spend time playing and loafing outside the den just before they are able to go out with their parents. This is one of the most enjoyable wildlife viewing experiences people can have. Grab a camera and take a picture.

However, some people want the family to move. In these cases, mild harassment may encourage a move. Start with placing objects or moving leaves, soil or mulch around to disturb the denning animals. Ammonia-soaked rags placed at the entrance of a burrow or around the place where animals come and go under the porch may encourage their leaving. Anything with a human scent will alarm the foxes as well, and some have recommended putting smelly sweat socks or old sneakers around the area where foxes come and go. Recently, some people have claimed success in getting fox families to move by using scare balloons mounted about 2 to 3 feet off the ground, just outside the entrance to the den. In all of these strategies the idea is to make the parents uncomfortable and get them to move the litter — after that, make sure the move has occurred before trying to exclude them.

HABITAT MANAGEMENT

Food lures foxes into suburban yards. Compost piles should never receive meat scraps, and garbage should be placed outside only the morning of collection. If that is not possible, the cans must be secured from access. This can be done by simply providing tight-fitting lids if only foxes are involved, or more secure fasteners if other, more persistent trash specialists such as the raccoon are involved. A cord threaded through the handle of the lid and hooked onto the sides of the can is a simple yet effective tactic. Dishes of pet food should not be left outside overnight. Foxes will be attracted to bird feeders and may even eat spilled sunflower seeds if hungry enough. Mostly, however, the sight of a fox around a feeder suggests that the spillage is being used by rodents, who have left their scent there and attracted the fox to the site.

Do Foxes Eat Cats?

People are frequently concerned about their pets being outdoors when foxes are around. We do not recommend that cats be allowed to roam freely, and suggest that the best way to avoid encounters between foxes and cats is to keep the cat indoors. By and large, however, foxes seem to pay little heed to adult cats, recognizing that they are dealing with an animal that is almost their size (often) and certainly one that has a well-deserved reputation for self-defense. Kittens, however, could be easy prey for a fox, as might small adult cats; therefore, caution is suggested whenever the two might come into contact.

Pileated Woodpeckers — large and exotic

A BIRDERS EYE VIEW

JOANNE C. NORTON

There are seven species of woodpeckers found in Massachusetts, not counting vagrants. Of these, the Pileated Woodpecker is the largest, the loudest, and one of the least often seen. In fact, the pileated is the largest woodpecker found in North America. If you like birds easily identified because they "look exactly like the picture in the book", then you will love the Pileated Woodpecker. The only trick is to find one.

The Pileated Woodpecker is about the size of a crow, and its large red crest gives its head a very triangular shape. The bold black and white markings on its face and neck give it a rather exotic look that commands attention. At rest, the back looks completely black, except for a small white wing patch. In flight, the upper wing shows white wing patches, and the underside of the wings have large areas of white.

The Pileated Woodpecker is a permanent resident, not a migrant. Its scientific name, Dryocopus pileatus, means "crested tree cleaver". Carpenter ants make up 60 percent of its diet, but it also eats other insects and even a little fruit at times. Its long and sturdy bill makes an excellent tool for chiseling in dead trees to find ants and insects. These birds are remarkably good at finding the best place to enter the tree in order to reach the middle of a carpenter ant colony. They create hole openings which are rectangular or elongated ovals. These holes can be up to several inches long.

The males are the ones to choose the nesting site, but both sexes do the excavating. They use dead trees or sometimes poles. According to Alexander F. Skutch, the results of a study of Pileated Woodpeckers nesting in poles treated with creosote showed that only a quarter of the eggs hatched, and none of the nestlings survived. Pileated woodpeckers roost in separate holes, but take turns incubating the eggs, which are laid in a third hole. Both parents feed regurgitated food to the young. As the young grow, their bills can be a hazard to the attending adult. One solution is for the parent to cling to the tree, leaning sideways to feed the baby from a safe angle. Black snakes are a potential threat, but pileateds do not stand idly by when a snake arrives. They will fight hard and sometimes are even able to kill these intruders.

Banding records of Pileated Woodpeckers show that they can live at least as long as 13 years. Most woodpeckers fly in an undulating fashion, but pileateds can also fly in a more level and steady manner. These woodpeckers are one of the few birds known to carry eggs. A photograph was taken of a female carrying eggs to a new site after the top of its nesting tree was blown off in a storm in the Everglades. Upon his return, the surprised male had to do some hunting to find his family.

Perhaps you have heard of the Ivory-billed Woodpecker, which is now probably extinct. I say "probably", because from time to time sightings are reported. Unfortunately, search teams sent out to follow up on these reports have not always come up with confirmation. Confirmation was made of two birds found in Cuba in the late 80's, but these are believed to have died since. The most recent controversial sighting was in Louisiana in 1999. The Ivory-billed Woodpecker is similar in looks to the Pileated Woodpecker, but it is larger, and is in a different genus, Campephilus principalis.

Although Pileated Woodpeckers generally require a large territory of forest with mature trees, they seem to be adapting to smaller woodlots and even suburban yards with suet feeders. This means that their numbers are beginning to increase, unlike the ivory-billed. There are many fewer Pileated Woodpeckers in southeastern Massachusetts than in other portions of the state. However, they have been seen in the George Washington Town Forest in Hingham, and have come to feeders on South Pleasant Street.

If you want to take a break from chasing all those spring migrants, try exploring the Town Forest to see if you can find a Pileated Woodpecker. Listen for loud drumming and raucous calls. Look for piles of new wood chips at the base of trees. Watch for a flash of black and white. And if you happen to see an Ivory-billed Woodpecker, please let me know!

area in terms of hours of operation and capacity, floating different hours at each with feedback from those at the hearing. But that approach met with opposition from some neighbors.

Neal Glick of Spring Street — who sat with a copy of state law on his lap and reminded selectmen of their authority to restrict licenses under statute — said selectmen needed to look at the big picture to fairly assess the impact of the facility.

"It's the whole package," Glick said. "We're micro-managing everything." He said it's the cumulative effect that matters and called the proposal "use creep" claiming that Ordelheide started with a bakery at the Lilac House and that led to a wine bar and then to a function hall with entertainment.

"It's not just the alcohol, it's not just the noise — it's everything together," Glick said.

Selectmen solicited comments from the audience — including a group of neighbors who are part of the South Main Street Association that is opposed to any liquor being served at the former Lilac House — on the issues as they waded through the different aspects of the facility.

Selectman Fred Koed tried to form a type of grid to keep track of the capacity, hours and various proposals at each of the areas.

Ordelheide brought a sample of the wall material, that includes 9-inches of Styrofoam insulation, to the hearing as an example of noise abatement. He assured selectmen that he wanted to better any state standards on noise.

"I don't want any noise," he said. "I want to do better than the state limits. I don't want to sit here and have you pull my license because of noise."

But Meg Bertolami, 95 S. Main St., said the material meant little without a sound engineer's report to interpret what it could do.

And Glick, who argued that an acoustical engineer was needed, said state standards on noise don't exist.

"If there were then people in East Boston would not have 65 decibels overhead every time a Delta airplane goes overhead," he said.

Another problem raised was parking. At maximum capacity the inn and function halls could have upwards of 600 people that would require 179 parking spaces under the town by-law. The town parking lot that is not used heavily at night when the inn would be busiest holds 113.

Ordelheide, who said he has enough land behind the inn to create a parking lot but warned that the abutters would be even more upset about that, argued that there is adequate parking in the town lot.

"I could do it, yes," he said. "But it would be ugly. I could put a lot up there with 250 cars."

Selectman Merle Brown said he doubted selectmen could restrict parking because they don't restrict it for any other village businesses.

The South Main Street neighbors said they were concerned about parking along that street and being blocked in by parked cars.

They also worry about the increase in traffic up and down the street that functions will no doubt create and the possibility of drunk drivers.

As a compromise to the neighbors concerns about the Lilac House, Ordelheide offered to move the proposed upscale wine bar over to the first floor of the proposed barn. But he said the function hall on the second floor at the Lilac House needed to be included in the liquor license.

Kasey McCarthy, 103 S. Main St., said the scope of the proposal was overwhelming.

"We're overwhelmed with the number of locations," she said. McCarthy said Ordelheide could turn the upstairs of the Lilac House into a spa.

"We asking that the license expansion be reasonable," she said. "If he needs to find a different use for (the function hall) then so be it."

Selectmen said they would issue a decision on the entertainment license and expanded liquor license Tuesday.

No agreement on septic standards

but their complaints may be of little consequence, as their demands of the developers exceed state requirements.

In January of 1998 the Scituate board of health approved the septic systems under 1978 Title 5 laws because Arrowood had been approved for construction in 1994 before more strict regulations came into effect. However, Norfolk Environmental has been critical of the plans, calling for Arrowood to go above and beyond its requirements—which they say they have done—even though developers are meeting the guidelines of their permits.

Commission chairman John McNabb is asking for pretreatment of the septic systems as "the minimum that we'd want."

That would take nitrogen out of the liquid traveling from the septic systems on the way to the leaching fields. Pretreatment is not required.

Yesterday developers offered nitrate removal "equal to or exceeding Cape Cod requirements" which are twice as strict as state requirements and one water commissioner said that would still not be adequate, said Bjorkland. The commission has said it wants the septic systems moved entirely to another location.

With the development's infrastructure nearing completion and all septic systems having been installed, Bjorkland said that demand cannot be met.

"There is no where else on the property that is adequate for septic disposal," he said.

He said to meet the commission's demands would cost over $200,000.

The developers have been criticized for installing septic systems 200 feet away from the Aaron River Reservoir, which are nevertheless up to code. Bjorkland believes commissioners are being hypocritical on this issue.

"The septic system at the water department building is 200 feet from the inlet pipe to the treatment plant and the intake for the system at Lily Pond is where the parking lot runoff is," he said in a later interview, implying that the water commissioners' own building is more of a danger to the town's water supply than is the new development. "We're two miles upstream from the inlet...If they are looking to make us exceed regulations they should do the same. If we hired Norfolk to evaluate their property according to these regulations they would absolutely fail.

"Our subdivision is superior to what is in the area, they ought to look in their own backyard."

He also said many of the developments surrounding the pond have septic systems a mere 25 feet from the water.

The environmental report has found that developers are meeting all legal requirements, but Bjorkland feels the commissioners are attempting to hold them to "arbitrary regulations that are not applicable to the subdivision."

"The conservation commission, board of health, planning board...have implemented an incredible amount of restrictions against the development to ensure the safety of the Cohasset water supply and the developers have agreed to every one of them," he said.

Said Mark Winchester, "These are $250,000 lots and we don't want people saying they don't meet the required standards because they do meet every regulation...This will probably be Scituate's finest development of single homes.

"Our credibility means a lot to us and we want the people of Cohasset to know we're doing the right thing."

Also at the meeting an issue arose which could prove to be a thorn because the relationship between developers and the water commission appears to be increasingly strained.

In the 1970s the Winchesters owned land abutting the reservoir. They granted an easement to the town of Cohasset to flood the reservoir onto their land on the condition that the town would not "interfere or arbitrarily oppose" remaining development of the Winchester property, said Bjorkland. He believes the water commission is currently violating the conditions of the easement.

"We don't want to go to court and order you to move the reservoir off the Winchesters' property," Bjorkland told commissioners last week.

He says the intent of developers is to "work in the spirit of cooperation with the commissioners."

Golfer hopes new miniature course will be a hit

Grand opening is Friday

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Unlike the owners of most golf courses, Mary-Anne Crawford can always count on perfect weather.

That's because her 18-hole course is inside where proper lighting and temperature can be controlled by the flip of a switch.

Crawford, a Quincy resident, recently opened Par-Tee, an indoor miniature golf facility, at Tedeschi Plaza off Rte. 3A.

The 36-year-old golf enthusiast took up the sport a few years back when her father retired and they started playing together once a week.

"Then I started thinking I'd like to do something related to golf," Crawford recalls. She thought the miniature golf business might be best way to blend her love of golf with her experience.

"I was thinking about golf, what could I do. Then it hit me, what about miniature golf?" she says. "After all, it's golf and I love kids."

Crawford, who majored in English at UMass Boston and considered becoming an English teacher at one time, worked for 13 years at Wollaston Market, an independent grocery store, as the service manager. Her duties included working with the teens employed as baggers and cashiers.

"My job there was really a teaching position," she says.

Crawford studied golf magazines that advertised miniature golf equipment and started making calls to learn all she could about the business.

"I learned about the equipment, how to get it and how to pick out the course," she says. "Then once I found the spot, the rest was kind of easy."

Finding the right location that was affordable was a challenge.

Her brother, who lives in Cohasset, let her know there was an opening at the plaza, so Crawford called John Whalen at Tedeschi Realty, who was very helpful.

"John Whalen was the first person to give me the chance to do this."

The space — that was created when Tedeschi Realty subdivided the former Woolworth's site — includes a 1,200-square-foot hallway that leads to a 2,500-square-foot room that runs along the back of the plaza building. At one time, Tedeschi thought a fitness center or gym that did not need a large storefront might be attracted to the site.

"This type of use works with the space," said Whalen, who is director of property at Tedeschi Realty, about indoor miniature golf. "Few other uses would have been as adaptable." He pointed out that Crawford was able to lay out some holes in the hallway.

Whalen said Crawford's energy and commitment was what Tedeschi was looking for.

"We're confident that she'll be successful," he said.

Golf holes

Crawford bought the miniature golf holes through Lomma Enterprises, Inc. of Scranton, Penn. The company also provided an owner/operator packet that included a sample business plan with information about how much business she could expect to do each month. The packet also included promotional ideas such as mother-daughter tournaments, birthday parties and senior events.

Gary Knight, executive vice president at Lomma, said miniature golf is riding the wave of popularity of regular golf, which he says is currently the fastest growing sport in the world.

"We all played windmill, church-barn miniature golf," he says. "But now miniature golf lends itself more toward real golf with Pro-Am holes." The holes have risers, contours and undulations and even have simulated sand traps and water hazards.

Knight says miniature golf facilities like Par-Tee have something for everyone.

"The little guys can bring grandmother along," he says. "It's one of the few activities that the whole family can do together."

Crawford has installed nine holes that actually have dual holes. Turf-covered plugs fill one cup and then for the second round — players move the plugs — changing the hole placement. So the golfer is actually playing the hole with a new pin position creating the feeling of actually playing 18 different holes.

And to satisfy those who like the more traditional obstacles in miniature golf, Crawford has installed three super-challenge holes in the hallway with discounts offered for holes in one.

Financing

Crawford obtained financing for her business through SEED Corp. in Taunton. SEED, which stands for South Eastern Economic Development, is a non-profit agency operated under the auspices of the federal Small Business Administration.

Executive director Maria Gooch said the agency helps provide small businesses with "micro" loans of under $25,000 that they might not be able to get elsewhere. The benefits are job creation and a boost to the local economy, she said.

> "I was thinking about golf, what could I do. Then it hit me, what about miniature golf? After all, it's golf and I love kids."
> — Mary-Anne Crawford

"It's tough for small businesses just getting started to get loans from a bank," Gooch says.

Crawford spent about $12,000 on equipment, including clubs and balls, and the golf holes that came partially assembled. The inside of the facility is decorated in a nautical theme. She went to Bonnie Muir's art class at Cohasset High and solicited students to create the brightly painted murals for the main room and the party room.

Par-Tee's grand opening is on May 19 when the first 50 participants will receive a free T-shirt. Refreshments and balloons will also be available. For the opening, miniature golfers can play two rounds and get one free, and have a chance to win a set of junior golf clubs and other prizes.

Crawford also offers customized parties. For more information, call 383-6900. Current hours are 10 a.m. – 8:30 p.m. Tuesday-Friday; 10 a.m.-10 p.m. Friday and Saturday; and 10 a.m.-10 p.m. Sunday. Par-Tee is closed Mondays.

Hope dwindles for plan to relocate lobster shop

lobster a year. Sixty percent of the lobster pound's business is from Cohasset, Alioto said.

If it could relocate to the Hagerty property, the lobster pound would even provide the lobsters for the Cohasset Lobster Lab, an educational research organization, that leases the Hagerty house from the town and is charged with renovating that building.

The issue was not favorably received when it was brought up at the selectmen's meeting last week by chairman Tom Callahan. It set off a rancorous squabbling session among board members upset that a business would even be considered for the site. But Mike Wilson, a Cohasset lobsterman for nearly 50 years, said the lobster pound is a good asset and the plan deserves consideration.

He pointed out that when lobstermen can do their business in town, they stop at the local gas station or hardware store on their way home. "It brings new money into town," he said.

Wilson said without a local lobster pound, lobstermen will have to take their lobsters someplace else.

"Most would take them to Humarock but that adds an hour to your day. That might not sound like much, but when you get started at 4:30 a.m., that's a lot," he said.

Wilson said the fact the lobster pound had to move just doesn't seem fair. "It seems like the small guy is getting phased out," he said.

In a memo in selectmen's correspondence, health board chairman Stephen N. Bobo — who is also a member of the board at the lobster lab — detailed the proposal. He said benefits include the town's deriving income from a local industry and the Hagerty property would have a better use than just a parking lot. The lobster lab plans that have been approved call for removal of the showroom wing of the Hagerty house. Bobo said the showroom could be moved to the slab for use in construction of a new lobster pound, which would cover the cost of renovations.

"Nothing is more related than this type of business," Alioto said. "I don't want to fix cars or make furniture there."

Alioto said he ships Cohasset lobsters all over the world. "We take them to the airport or wherever they have to go. We're making this town famous," he said, laughing as he displayed a box used to ship lobsters that had the name Cohasset in big letters printed on it.

Alioto, a native of Italy, was told he would have to move by June 1, but hopes Roy will let him finish the season that runs to about Jan. 1. "I'll go someplace else. I won't go out of business," he said.

Selectmen put the lobster pound proposal on their May 23 agenda. They wanted to get the Hagerty committee's recommendation before discussing the issue. The Hagerty committee is charged with coming up with a recreational use plan for the two-acre, waterfront parcel at the end of Parker Avenue.

False ID deterrence program wins praise locally

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

False IDs are the bane of liquor stores and bar rooms. With a good false ID, individuals younger than the legal drinking age of 21 can purchase beer, wine, and hard liquor. The good news is that technology has made driver's licenses nearly impossible to duplicate. The bad news is that creative individuals still find ways to obtain false IDs for purchasing alcohol.

"On occasion, a package store or bar room catches someone with a false ID," said Police Chief Brian Noonan. "It's not as common as it used to be because the Registry has really cracked down on the use of false IDs. But every now and then we get someone."

The state Alcoholic Beverages Control Commission (ABCC) is trying to raise awareness about the prevalence of false IDs exactly one year after the Legislature imposed new penalties on individuals purchasing alcoholic beverages with false identification. The law imposes up to a six-month driver's license suspension for individuals who are caught with false IDs. Beginning on April 19, 2000, the ABCC unveiled a public awareness program aimed at informing people about the key points of the program.

The cornerstone of the ABCC program is an affidavit form that any adult can fill out informing the Registry of Motor Vehicles that an underage person possesses a false ID for the purpose of purchasing alcoholic beverages. The individual who sends the affidavit to the Registry must include the false ID with the documentation. The Registry will conduct an investigation into the claim. Individuals found to possess false IDs can have their driver's licenses suspended for up to six months.

"I think it's a great law. In talking with our kids, we find that many of our older students get their alcohol from slightly older kids with false IDs. The younger kids who drink generally get their alcohol by stealing it from their parents."
— Mike Gill, CHS social health director

The ABCC has been placing posters in liquor stores and bars informing patrons of the penalties for people caught with false IDs. The Massachusetts Associations Working for Alcohol Responsibility and Education (Mass. AWARE), designed, produced and distributed the posters.

"Our students are aware of this program," said Cohasset High School Social Health Director, Mike Gill. "I think it's a great law. In talking with our kids, we find that many of our older students get their alcohol from slightly older kids with false IDs. The younger kids who drink generally get their alcohol by stealing it from their parents."

Curtis Liquors of Cohasset has one of the strictest ID policies on the South Shore. Andy Hailer of Curtis Liquors said anyone who purchases alcohol at the store and looks 40-year-old or younger must present a valid ID, usually a Massachusetts driver's license.

"The reason we do age 40 is that the ABCC conducts stings, and they have been known to send in an 18-year-old girl in a business suit, with her hair up and wearing eyeglasses so that she could pass for 35 at first glance," Hailer said. "The way we do it, if a cashier fails to ask anyone younger than 40 for an ID, that person gets a $5 gift certificate. It keeps our cashiers alert."

Hailer said he can't remember the last time anyone tried to present him with a false ID. Several years ago, the state created new driver's licenses with hologram images of the state seal on the front. Although it would be easy to use a scanner to create an altered copy, it is nearly impossible to duplicate the hologram. Some individuals try to use passports or military IDs to purchase liquor, but they are usually rejected, Hailer said.

"If someone comes in with an out-of-state ID or a passport, I'll look at the person carefully," Hailer said. "If they're obviously 50-years-old or something like that, we'll sell to them. We don't get too many false IDs because of our reputation for checking everyone younger than 40."

Noonan said the police have distributed a 50-state driver's license identification booklet to all local package stores and bar rooms. The 100-page booklet provides pictures of driver's licenses from all 50 U.S. states. Merchants can compare out-of-state IDs against the photos in the booklet for accuracy.

Although it might seem that some people would balk at the strict ID policy at Curtis Liquors, the reality has been just the opposite, Hailer said.

"Many patrons in their thirties and forties are flattered when we ask them for IDs," Hailer said. "It makes them feel younger."

Summer courses using the great outdoors

The Summer Institute is a series of courses that are designed to expose students to a variety of topics through outdoor experiences which maximize use of New England's unique environment and history. Students enrolled in Summer Institute courses receive credit equal to course credit earned during the traditional school year and are, therefore, expected to successfully complete comparable academic work.

Introduction to Maritime Studies — Grades 9, 10; July 10 - 28; Monday — Thursday, 9am - 1pm, 1-1/4 credits.

An Introduction to Maritime Studies is an inter-disciplinary three-week program designed to teach students the principles of marine biology, marine ecology, nautical science, and local maritime history. This course takes place in the context of a "Boat Journey" as students learn how to crew traditional pulling boats and turn them into research vessels.

Field Biology — Grades 9 - 12, Level 1, on-going (June 30 - August 30), 1-1/4credits

This field research course allows students to participate in meaningful biological field research which directly benefits the local community. Last year's water quality study of Little Harbor will be continued this year.

National Park Field Study — Grades 9 - 12 , July 31 - August 5, 1-1/4 credits

National Park Field Study is a short term (5-7 days), experiential, on-site study and exploration of a national park. Through the experiences of low impact camping and recreation including hiking, kayaking, and climbing, students will study the park's ecology and its natural and human history.

Internships — Grades: 9-12, interview required, June 30 - August 30, 1-1/4 credits

An internship is a guided study experience in the work environment. They are individualized "doing and studying" experiences in the workplace under the direct guidance of a mentor.

An Introduction to Organic Farming — Grades 7 - 10, August 7 - 25, Monday - Thursday, 9am - 1pm, 1-1/4credits.

This is a hands-on participatory class in which students learn the scientific principles of organic farming through actual farming at Holly Hill Farms. Students and teacher will work and study alongside the Holly Hill Farm manager assisting him in all aspects of raising crops without the use of modern pesticides and insecticides.

To register or for more information, call Jack Buckley or Dave Magnussen at Cohasset High School, 383-6100. Courses are $75 with the exception of the national park field study in which students must pay for full travel, camping and equipment costs.

SENATE RACE NOTEBOOK

Jim Cantwell, far right, stands with supporters Tom Callahan and Fred Koed.

Municipal leaders endorse Cantwell for state senator

Municipal leaders throughout the South Shore — including 24 selectmen, former selectmen, and town councilors — endorsed Jim Cantwell as their candidate for State Senate this past Saturday.

Cantwell spoke to supporters while standing at Cohasset's town common.

He has garnered the support of community leaders in each of the district's eight towns. He said that his working relationship with each town's leadership, plus his own experience as a selectman, give him a detailed understanding of the region's most pressing issues and position him to be a strong advocate for Hingham and the entire South Shore.

Selectmen and town councilors who have endorsed Jim Cantwell include:

Dick Blake, former Selectman from Scituate; Tom Callahan, Selectman from Cohasset; Jim Casey, Selectman from Braintree; Joseph Connolly, Town Councilor from Weymouth; Reno Constantinides, former Selectman from Hull; Josh Cutler, Selectman from Hull; Ken DiFazio, Town Councilor from Weymouth; Lee Dingee, Selectman from Braintree; Abdul Hamadeh, former Selectman from Duxbury; Doug Heald, former Selectman from Marshfield; Jim Fitzgerald, Selectman from Marshfield; William Francis, former Selectman from Marshfield; Faith Jean, Selectman from Marshfield; Susan Kay, Inaugural Committee Chair and former Weymouth Selectman; Fred Koed, Selectman from Cohasset; Tim MacKenzie, Selectman from Hull; Andre Martecchini, Selectman from Duxbury; Ronnie McMorris, Selectman from Cohasset; Peter Mullen, Selectman from Marshfield; Peter Pratt, former Selectman from Cohasset; Ned Tebbetts, former Selectman from Cohasset; Jim Tobin, former Selectman from Hull; Jim Sullivan, Selectman from Braintree; and Friend Weiler, former Selectman from Duxbury. To learn more about the Cantwell Campaign or to volunteer to help, call Suzanne Cutler, town coordinator, at 749-3342, or Wyatt Lipman, town coordinator, at 740-2202, or Kathy Norman at 749-0573.

(L-R) Ted LeClair, Democratic State Senate candidate for the Plymouth-Norfolk district and the Assistant Town Clerk of Cohasset, Carol St. Pierre.

LeClair on state Senate ballot

Ted LeClair, Democratic candidate for State Senate in the Plymouth-Norfolk district, submitted his campaign nomination papers to the Assistant Town Clerk of Cohasset, Carol St. Pierre. Although only 300 certified voter signatures are required for a candidate to be on the ballot, more than 1,100 men and women from communities across the district signed LeClair's nomination papers.

"I am grateful to the men and women from throughout this district who have helped put my name on the Democratic State Primary ballot," LeClair said. "I have been truly encouraged by the response I have received as I have campaigned door-to-door. I think change is in the air and people are ready for a different kind of Senator speaking up for them on Beacon Hill."

LeClair is a native of Scituate and current resident of Marshfield. He is a former naval officer and founder of LeClair Brothers Cranberry Company, a supplier of cranberries to wholesalers and distributors and part owner of Webster Cranberry Company.

Bradley hosts golf tournament

The tournament will be held at the Widows Walk Golf Course, 250 The Driftway in Scituate. Tee time is 8 a.m., followed by a fabulous round of golf and lunch at Widow's Walk. Foursomes can register for $500 and individuals for $125.

To register or receive more information about the golf tournament, call Michael Salerno at the Bradley headquarters at 740-7272.

Holden files papers

On Friday, May 5, Mike Holden, a candidate for state representative in Hingham, Hull and Cohasset, officially entered the race by submitting several hundred signatures to the secretary of state's office in Boston. Candidates for state representative must obtain at least 150 certified signatures from the cities or towns in the district. Signatures must be certified by the town clerk in the town they were obtained and then forwarded to the secretary of state for final approval.

The secretary of state's office certified more than 400 of Holden's signatures from Hingham, Hull and Cohasset, leaving the balance as unnecessary for certification. Holden explained that he personally gathered far more than the required number of signatures. "Getting signatures for your candidacy is a necessity to qualify for the ballot, but more importantly it provides an opportunity for me to meet voters, get to know their concerns and discuss my qualifications for office."

Holden explained that he believes meeting with voters one on one is the most effective way of campaigning.

"I've been listening closely to the voters. It is clear they are looking for a candidate with the ability to protect our interests and secure limited state resources for this district when Rep. Murray steps down. I believe that my candidacy provides the voters with someone with proven leadership skills and the experience necessary to effectively deal with the complicated issues of education, health care and transportation that are facing this district."

Holden also announced that he would soon be making an official announcement about the opening of his campaign headquarters at 4 North St. in Hingham Harbor. The office is providing those who are volunteering to help with Holden's candidacy a central location to organize their efforts.

Devine at forum

Maureen A. Devine, candidate for the state representative seat being vacated by Mary Jeannette Murray, attended a Candidates Night forum and dinner hosted by the Cohasset Republican Town Committee last week. She was introduced by the committee chair, and her long list of accomplishments and service to the community was presented. Devine spoke to the audience, listing her priority issues, and then answered questions.

"It was a great opportunity to meet voters who are highly committed to the political process and responsible government," Devine said.

The Devine campaign recently announced some of the committee chairs, including Polly Logan, Sue Mills, Nancy Tartol, Kevin Murphy, Roberta McDonnell, Kathleen Calnan, Margaret Costello, Sue Wilbur and Will McDonough (sports stars fund raising).

If you wish to host an event, call Sue Wilbur 749-5380 or Sue Mills at 749-9596. Call the candidate or the campaign treasurer at 740-1334.

McKenna at GOP event

Mary Anne McKenna, candidate for State Representative for Hingham, Hull, and Cohasset, attended the annual Cohasset Lasagna Dinner on Thursday evening. The event was hosted by the Cohasset Republican Town Committee and was held at St. Stephen's Church.

In her opening statement, McKenna spoke about the imbalance in the State Legislature. "If the two-party system of government is to survive in Massachusetts, we must keep this seat. The House of Representatives, consisting of 160 members, has only 27 Republicans! There is little or no meaningful debate in the Massachusetts House of Representatives on behalf of Massachusetts taxpayers."

"We live with rules, regulations, permits, fees, fines, taxes, and on and on. Government imposes it's presence in all aspects of our lives. I consider myself to be a moderate Republican who believes we are losing our freedoms through ever-expanding taxation and government interference!"

For more information or to volunteer with Citizens for McKenna, please call Mary Anne at 749-5004, Billy Ramsey at 749-2532, or Nancy Wilkinson at 383-0187.

Harold to run

Paul D. Harold, Quincy City Council president, has announced that he is a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Norfolk County Register of Deeds. The post is being vacated by long-serving register Barry Hannon who will not seek re-election.

Harold is an attorney, a member of the Democratic State Committee and the former state Senator from the Norfolk District (Quincy, Braintree, Holbrook and Avon). He has a master's degree in public administration from Harvard's Kennedy School and is an adjunct professor at Curry College in Milton.

As a legislator, Harold received a number of honors and awards, including the legislative awards from both the Norfolk County Bar Association and the Norfolk County Central Labor Council.

Kahn, Sheerin big scorers in tough loss to Sandwich

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset girls varsity lacrosse team fought valiantly against a tough Sandwich team on Tuesday afternoon, but was eventually defeated 18-13.

"We played very well against Sandwich," said girls lacrosse coach Kathy Fahey. "They're one of the top three teams in our league."

Cohasset struck very quickly in opening up the game to a 3-1 lead within the first two minutes. Sandwich then scored seven unanswered goals to take a five-goal lead into halftime.

After the intermission, Cohasset busted out of the gate with four goals in the first three minutes of the second half to close within one.

Unfortunately for the Lady Skippers, the Sandwich offense came alive as junior Holly Frankio (five goals in the game) and senior Ashley Cotter (four goals) led the way back to a five-goal lead.

Cohasset senior captain Jackie Kahn led the offense with five goals, including two in the first

Losing streak halted in big win over Hull

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Behind the strong starting pitching of sophomore Nick Bolster and relief pitching of senior Greg O'Keeffe, the Cohasset Skippers defeated the Pirates of Hull 5-3 on Monday.

Bolster, a right-handed fastball pitcher, had three strikeouts through the four innings he pitched; allowing only two earned runs. He also helped his own winning cause with a double, a single, an RBI, and two runs scored.

O'Keeffe came to the mound after Bolster had given up an infield single in the fifth, with Hull ahead 3-2.

Unfortunately for Hull, as soon as coach Robert Knurek made the pitching change, the bats soon came alive for Cohasset.

RBI singles by sophomore catcher Tim Straughn and junior shortstop TJ Bilodeau gave Cohasset a 4-3 lead. Sophomore third baseman Chris Caron finished the rally with a run scoring, opposite field double into the right-centerfield gap.

O'Keeffe earned the win in relief to improve to 4-1 on the season, his only loss coming in a heartbreaker to Nantucket, 4-3.

The win over Hull marked the end of a five-game losing streak for the Boys shine at track championships

Four first-place finishes at South Shore League meet

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The Cohasset boys track team continued a phenomenal season last Tuesday in winning four events at the South Shore League championship meet.

Junior Brian Krupczak continued his undefeated streak in the 200-meter dash with a league title, while sophomore Tim Baird won two events, the mile run and triple jump.

"Tim is probably our most versatile athlete," coach Al LaFountain said of Cohasset's only double-winner in individual events at the league meet. "He not only is an outstanding triple jumper, but he can run anything from the 100-meter dash to the two-mile."

Cohasset's outstanding 4 x 100-meter relay team of Krupczak, Steve Laney, Craig Parker, and Khalil Madyun also won the league championship.

"We're starting to learn how to win in Cohasset."
Track coach Al LaFountain

Second-place finishes went to Stefan Vanderweil in the 100-meter hurdles and Peter Maitland in the 800-meter run.

Overall, the meat was a smashing success for a Cohasset squad which finished second in the league standings with a 5-1 record. Only an 81-55 loss to carver last Thursday kept the Skippers from a perfect season.

"It'd been a pretty stellar year, actually," LaFountain said. "Carver has been dominant for so many years, but things are finally evening out. We're starting to learn how to win in Cohasset, not just in track, but in many other sports as well. The kids now have the mentality that they're not going to let somebody go by them. We have unbelievably hard workers that just don't give up."

Especially for such a small school, Cohasset's performance this season has been nothing short of phenomenal. In dual meets, a team is awarded five points for a first-place finish, three points for a second place finish, and one point for a second-place finish. With so many spring sports,

Girls tennis on a roll

Showdown looming with Norwell

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The undefeated Cohasset girls tennis team has only one obstacle remaining in its quest for the South Shore League championship.

That obstacle is Norwell, who has only one league loss, and is the class of the league along with the Skippers. Cohasset (5-0) and Norwell have yet to tangle this season due to rainouts, and are set to renew their rivalry today (Wednesday) at Norwell.

Coach Gigi Meehan was actually excited about the rainouts of the last couple weeks, because she only missed one of her team's matches while on vacation in Italy. She said she didn't want to miss the Norwell match for anything.

"It's going to be a fantastic match," she said. "Norwell's only league defeat was to Norton, and they were missing most of their team. It's going to be a very even match."

At first singles, Cohasset senior captain Kate Stone will take on Norwell's outstanding sophomore, Sara Bitetti. Last year, Bitetti defeated Stone both times they played, but Meehan thinks Stone is capable of an upset this time around.

"Sara's ranked in New England and she's a tremendous player, but Kate's playing the best she's ever played, and she's been my number one player for five years," Meehan said. "I think Kate's experience is really going to help her. She's mentally ready. She'll give Sara a great match."

At second singles, Meehan has a tremendous player in freshman Lindsay Grossman, whose athleticism has been a spark for the Skippers.

"I predict she'll go undefeated," Meehan said of Grossman, who has yet to drop a match this season. "She hits the ball so beautifully. She was torn between track and tennis, and I'm sure glad she chose to play tennis. She's a great player."

"It's been a great season so far."
Girls tennis coach Gigi Meehan

Cohasset's third singles player, Julie Shea, is also undefeated on the season. The combination of stone, Grossman and Shea in singles has been unbeatable so far this season.

"We're very fortunate to have three players who are not only good athletes and can move around the court, but they have great ground strokes as well," Meehan said.

Junior Ary Afshar and senior Jessie Zerendow team at first doubles, and have lost only twice this season, both times to the very athletic Hanover pair of Kelly Sarson and Nilah Pendian. Meehan said the pair will need to be on their game to gain a point against Norwell.

"Ary could probably be our third singles, but she's such a good doubles player," Meehan said. "Jessie is also so steady. Against Hanover, they tried to hit the ball by those girls at the net, but those two are very good athletes. It would have served them better to hit easy lobs. As long as they play their game, they'll do very well."

The second doubles pairing of senior Jessica Niessink and sophomore Kelly Stone is also undefeated on the season and will prove a tough matchup for Norwell.

"Those two just have a great partnership," Meehan said. "They really like playing with each other and they work so well together. They're really starting to understand how to play doubles."

Cohasset has another match with Norwell on May 23 as well as a match against Abington. If the Skippers win two out of those three, or even sweep, they will be assured of a fairly high seed in the state tournament, which gets underway the first week in June.

Meehan said tournament play is much different than competition in the South Shore League.

"We have a very weak, very small league," she said. "Hull doesn't have a team, and most of the others in the league just aren't at our level. It would be nice to be in the top of the draw, so we can have a couple of easy matches. I'd like to see us get into the third round."

The Skippers haven't played any non-league matches this year against the better teams around, such as Patriot League teams Scituate and Hingham. Meehan said she didn't expect her team to be nearly as good as it is.

"I knew we'd have a small squad, so I kind of took it easy when scheduling," she said. "Last year, we played Scituate and got thoroughly thumped. But we're a lot more solid this year than I had anticipated when making the schedule. The girls work so hard. It's been a great season so far."

such as lacrosse, baseball, tennis and golf, it can be difficult for a school as small as Cohasset to have the depth necessary to score enough second and third-place finishes to compete.

"Carver doesn't have lacrosse and they're a bigger school, so they've got a much larger team than we do," LaFountain said. "Against Carver, we won eight first, and they won nine. It was the second and third places that killed us."

In the Carver meet, Baird won the mile and triple jump, while Maitland won the javelin and took second in the 800-meter run. Krupczak and Parker swept the 100 and 200-meter dashes, and both were also members of the victorious 4x100-meter relay squad. Dan Kinchler also took five big points with his win in the two-mile.

An amazing number of Cohasset track athletes have qualified for the state meet, to be held in Norwell on Memorial Day weekend.

Krupczak, who hasn't lost in the 200-meter dash in two years, has qualified in that event as well as the long jump, triple jump, 100-meter dash and 4x100-meter relay. Because athletes are only allowed to enter one track event, one field event and a relay at the state meet, Krupczak will run the 200-meter dash, long jump, and take part in the 4x100-meter relay.

Parker is also a multiple qualifier, having met the state standards in the shot put, discus, 100-meter dash, 200-meter dash, and 4x100-meter relay.

Madyun will take part in the 100-meter dash, and 4x400-meter relay, while Maitland (javelin and high jump) and Baird (mile and triple jump) will also compete in two events.

Other qualifiers are Robin Cunningham (110-meter hurdles), Vanderweil (110-meter hurdles), Laney (4x100-meter relay) and Kinchler (two-mile).

"Our program has really taken off," LaFountain said. "Last year, we also went 5-1 in the league. Hopefully, the younger kids will see that. Kids always want to be part of a winning team."
